(3) A size of paper, 26 by 33 (34) inches. 3. Arch. See ATLANTES. 4. [A-] Class. Myth. One of the older family of gods, a Titan who was supposed to support the pillars of heaven on his shoulders as a punishment for making war against Zeus; hence, fig., one who sustains a great burden. 5. Anat. The first cervical vertebra or topmost bone of the spine. It articulates above with the condyles of the occipital bone, allowing nodding movement of the head, and rests on the second vertebra, upon which it turns in rotation of the head. See ARTICULATION. 6. A large Oriental scarabæid beetle (Chalcosoma atlas), brilliant olive-green in color. 7. [A-] A double range of mountains in N. W. Africa, culminating in Tamjurt peak, in S. Morocco, about 14,500 ft. high. [L., < Gr. Atlas, Atlas, < a- euphonic + tlaō, bear.] — at'las-fo"lio, n. A large square folio book made of atlas paper.

at'las-ite, 1 at'las-ıt; 2 ăt'las-īt, n. Mineral. A cupric carbonate containing chlorin: probably a mixture of atacamite and azurite. [< ATLAS¹, 4.]

at'lat-l, 1 at'lat-l; 2 ăt'lăt-l, n. [Mex.] The ancient Mexican spear-thrower or throwing-stick.

at'lee, 1 at'lı; 2 ăt'lē, n. [Egypt.] The Oriental tamarisk (Tamarix orientalis). at'lee-gall", n. A gall produced upon the atlee and filled with a deep-scarlet liquid.

At'li, 1 ät'lı; 2 ăt'lı, n. Scand. Myth. A king in the Volsunga Saga, who makes Gudrun his wife and later murders her brothers. She avenges their death by killing Atli and his sons. Compare ETZEL.

at'lo-, 1 at'lo-; 2 ăt'lo-. From ATLAS¹, 5: a combining form used to denote connection with the atlas of the vertebral column. Compare ATLANTO-.— at"lo-ax'oid, a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the bones called the atlas and the axis. See ARTICULATION.— at"lo-o-don'toid, a. Of or pertaining to the atlas and odontoid process in common.

at'loid, 1 at'loid; 2 ăt'lŏid, a. Anat. Pertaining to, connected with, or turning toward the atlas. [< ATLAS¹ + -OID.] at-loi'de-an‡.

at-loi'do-, 1 at-loi'do-; 2 ăt-lŏi'do-. From ATLOID: a combining form used to denote relation to or connection with the atlas of the vertebral column.— at-loi'do-ax"oid, a. Relating to the atlas and axis.

at'luk, 1 at'luk; 2 ăt'lụk, n. [Greenland.] A seal's breathing-hole in the ice.

The bearded seals have no atluk. They depend for respiration upon the accidental chasms in the ice.
KANE Arctic Explorations vol. i, p. 261. [c. & P. 1856.]

at'lu-nak, 1 at'lu-nak; 2 ăt'lụ-năk, n. [Greenland.] A seal-skin line used for catching walrus.

at'man, 1 ät'man; 2 ăt'man, n. [Sans.] 1. The soul, or selfhood; the spark in man emanating from divinity. 2. [A-] The spirit, or highest principle of life in the universe; the supreme Self or ego. In the Upanishads the Atman is regarded as the sole reality. "He created the whole world, whatever exists; having created it he entered into it as the individual soul." at'ma‡.

For Atman, originally breath or spirit, comes to mean Self and Self alone. MÜLLER Chips vol. i, p. 69. [s. 1869.]

at-mi'a-try, 1 at-mai'o-trı; 2 ăt-mī'a-try, n. Med. The treatment of disease by natural or medicated vapors. [< Gr. atmis, vapor, + iatreia, healing.] at"mi-at'rics‡; at"mi-di'a-try‡.

at'mic, 1 at'mik; 2 ăt'mic, a. 1. Meteor. Pertaining to humidity; as, an atmic wind-rose. 2. Of or belonging to atman. [< Gr. atmis, vapor.]

at'mid-, 1 at'mid-; 2 ăt'mid-. From Greek atmis, vapor: a combining form used in chemistry to denote formation by the hydrolyzing action of superheated water: used also adjectively; as, atmid compounds.— at"mid-al'bu-mose, n. Chem. A substance resembling albumose, derived from a proteid through the action of superheated water.— at"mi-dom'e-ter, n. An atmometer.— at"mi-dom'e-try, n. Same as ATMOMETRY.— at-mid"o-met'ric, a.— at-mid'o-scope, n. See ATMOMETER.

at'mo, 1 at'mo; 2 ăt'mo, n. Physics. The pressure of 760 millimeters of mercury in the latitude of Paris, at sea-level, and at 0° C.: a standard of pressure. [< ATMOSPHERE.]

at'mo-, 1 at'mo-; 2 ăt'mo-. From Greek atmos, vapor: a combining form.

at"mo-cau'ter-y, 1 at'mo-kô'tər-ı; 2 ăt'mo-cạ'ter-y, n. Med. An instrument for applying superheated steam. [< Gr. atmos, vapor, + CAUTERY.]

at"mo-gen'ic, 1 at'mo-jen'ik; 2 ăt'mo-ğĕn'ic, a. Petrol. 1. Pertaining to deposits formed by fumeroles. 2. Eolian.

at'mo-graph, 1 at'mo-graf; 2 ăt'mo-grăf, n. Med. An apparatus registering the movements of respiration. [< Gr. atmos, vapor, + graphō, write.]

at-mol'y-sis, 1 at-mol'ı-sis; 2 ăt-mŏl'y-sis, n. Chem. The act or process of partially separating mixtures of gases into their ingredients by means of their different diffusibility through porous substances. See OSMOSE. [< Gr. atmos, vapor, + lysis, loosing, < lyō, loose.]— at'mo-lyze or -lyse, tr. Chem. To separate by atmolysis.— at"mo-ly-za'tor -sa'tion, n.— at'mo-lyz"er or -lys"er, n. Chem. An instrument for the separation of gases by diffusion.

at-mom'e-ter, 1 at-mom'ı-tər; 2 ăt-mŏm'e-ter, n. Meteorol. An instrument for measuring the rate of evaporation. Many instruments have been devised for measuring evaporation, variously known as atmidometers, atmidoscopes, atmismometers, atmometers, evapometers, evaporation-gages, evaporators, evaporimeters, evaporometers, and vaporimeters: also frequently referred to under the names of their inventors; as, Leslie's atmometer; the Piche evaporimeter; or with mention of some feature of the construction; as, micrometric a.; weighing a. [< Gr. atmos, vapor, + metron, measure.]— at"mo-met'ric, a.

at-mo-met"ro-hy-grom'e-ter, 1 at'mo-met"ro-hai-grom'ı-tər; 2 ăt'mo-mĕt"ro-hȳ-grŏm'e-ter, n. Meteorol. A combined atmometer and hygrometer.

at-mom'e-try, 1 at-mom'ı-trı; 2 ăt-mŏm'e-try, n. The measurement of evaporation; atmidometry.

at"mos-phere, } 1 at'mas-fir; 2 ăt'mos-fēr, at'mos-fere, } n. 1. The mass or body of gases, chiefly air, that surrounds the earth. See AIR.

If it were everywhere as dense as it is at sea-level, the upper limit of our atmosphere would be about five miles high.
J. D. STEELE Physics p. 112. [CHAUT. 1889.]

2. The gaseous envelop surrounding any heavenly body, especially the sun or a planet; as, the atmosphere of Mars. 3. The climatic condition of any place or region regarded as dependent on the air; as, the atmosphere of the Campagna is malarial. 4. The surrounding element or influence, social or moral; environment.

In 'Philothea' (1835) Mrs. Child told a tale of Pericles and Aspasia, suffused with an atmosphere of Swedenborgianism and Bostonian transcendentalism. Edinburgh Review Jan., 1891, p. 44.

5. A conventional unit of pressure per unit of area.

The unit in use in England and the United States is the equivalent of the weight of a vertical mercury-column 1 centimeter wide and 30 inches high, at the sea-level at London, at a temperature of 0° C. For the French unit see ATMO.

6. Entom. The outer ring of an ocellus or eye-spot. 7. Paint. The feeling or effect, as of air, light, space, or warmth, given as an environment of any subject. 8. A supposed force-producing medium surrounding a body. [< Gr. atmos, vapor, + sphaira, sphere.]

at"mos-fer'ic, } Of, pertaining to, or belonging to the atmosphere; as, an atmospheric effect. 2. Dependent on the atmosphere as a cause or motor; as, an atmospheric engine. at"mos-pher'i-cal‡.— atmospheric brake, a vacuum-brake. Compare Westinghouse brake.— a. hammer, same as PNEUMATIC HAMMER.— a. line. 1. The line on an indicator-diagram representing the position of the indicator-piston when there is neither steam-pressure nor vacuum in the cylinder. 2. A dark line in the solar spectrum, due to the absorption of the earth's atmosphere.— a. pressure, the pressure of 14.7 pounds per square inch exerted at sea-level in all directions by the atmosphere under certain standard conditions. See ATMOSPHERE, 5.— a. railway, see PNEUMATIC RAILWAY, under PNEUMATIC.— a. spring, an air-spring.— at"mos-pher'i-cal-ly, adv.

at-mos'te-on, 1 at-mos'ti-on; 2 ăt-mŏs'te-ŏn, n. [-A, pl.] Ornith. An ossified tube that carries air into a bone; an air-bone. [< Gr. atmos, air, + osteon, bone.] — at-mos'te-al, a. Of or pertaining to the atmosteon; pneumatic.

At'mu, 1 ät'mū; 2 ăt'mu, n. Same as TUM.

a'to, 1 ä'to; 2 ä'to, n. [P. I.] A division of a town or ward among the Bontoc Igorots.

A-toc', 1 ə-tōk'; 2 ä-tōc', n. A town in the Benguet district of Luzon, P. I. [a-to'cha-grass"‡.

a-to'cha, 1 ə-tō'chə; 2 ä-tō'chä, n. [Sp.] Esparto-grass.

a-to'ci-a, 1 ə-tō'shi-ə; 2 ä-tō'shi-ä, n. Paihol. Barrenness. [< Gr. atokia, < a- priv. + tokos, offspring.]

Whitsunday Island, an Atoll near the Fiji Islands.

at'o-kous, 1 at'o-kus; 2 ăt'o-kŭs, a. Producing only asexual progeny, as the eggs of certain worms. [< Gr. atokos, barren, < a- priv. + tokos, offspring.]

a-to'le, 1 ə-tō'lā; 2 ä-tō'le, n. [Mex.] Corn-meal mush.

a-toll', 1 ə-tol' or at'ol; 2 a-tŏl' or ăt'ŏl, n. An annular island consisting of a reef formed from the petrified skeletons of coral polyps and enclosing a central lagoon. Some atolls are very large, being nearly 100 miles in circumference, while the lagoons have a mean depth of 25 fathoms. Atolls are common in the Pacific, often support a considerable amount of vegetation, and are frequently inhabited.

The formation of coral islands has been explained by Darwin on the hypothesis of a subsidence of the sea floor. The circular islands, or atolls, . . . rise with sometimes tolerably steep slopes from profound depths until they reach the surface of the sea. But as the coral polyps do not live at a greater depth than about 15 to 20 fathoms and could not have grown upward therefore from the bottom of a deep sea, Darwin inferred that the sites of these coral reefs had undergone a progressive subsidence, the rate of their upward growth keeping pace, on the whole, with that of their depression. . . . On this view what is termed a fringing reef would first be formed fronting the land. . . . Fringing reefs of this character are of common occurrence at the present time. In the case of a continent, they front its coast for a long distance, but they may entirely surround an island. . . . Prolonged slow depression would continually diminish the area of the land thus encircled, while the reef might retain much the same size and position. At last the final peak of the original island might disappear under the lagoon and an atoll, or true coral island, would be formed. GEIKIE Text-book of Geology vol. i, p. 618. [MACM. '03.]

at'om, 1 at'əm; 2 ăt'om, n. 1. One of the hypothetical indivisible parts of which all matter is supposed to be formed. (1) In modern scientific usage, the smallest portion into which matter can be divided, even by chemical separation, and still preserve its identity; the chemists' unit: now held to be made up of electrically charged particles. See ELECTRON; PROTON. Some undergo spontaneous disintegration. See RADIUM.

The molecule may be made up of many differing atoms, and all the chemical qualities of substances are held to depend on the number, properties, and relative positions of their constituent atoms. Thus, in chemistry, two atoms of hydrogen and one of oxygen make up a molecule of water. (2) A group of particles forming a specific radical; as, an atom of amidogen (NH_2). (3) Physics. Sometimes, a molecule. (4) Ancient Philos. One of the ultimate particles composing the universe; a microcosm. See ATOMIC PHILOSOPHY, ATOMISM.

Atom . . . now considered as a stable collection of numerous electrons forming a sort of planetary system in orbital motion.
The Science Year-Book, 1916, p. 83

2. Any very small thing or degree; a particle; an iota; as, not an atom of evidence. [< F. atome, < L. atomus, < Gr. atomos, < a- priv. + temnō, cut.] SYN.: see PART; PARTICLE.— at'om-soul", n. Primitive consciousness, or that which corresponds to consciousness, conceived of as existing in atomic form. See PANPSYCHISM.— gram a. (Chem.), the atomic weight of an atom expressed in grams, as, gram atom oxygen 16.

— at"o-me-chan'ics, n. The mechanics of atoms.— — a-tom'i-cule, n. Chem. A proposed subdivision of atoms whose valence exceeds unity. Am. Jour. of Math. vol. i, p. 64.— at"om-if'er-ous, a. That bears atoms. — at'om-less, a. Without an atom or atoms; also, without leaving an atom.

a-tom'ic, 1 ə-tom'ik; 2 a-tŏm'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to an atom or atoms, or the chemical or philosophical doctrine of atoms.

The latest atomic hypothesis is one which assigns an electrical structure to the atom. . . . It is rendered probable by the fact that electric charges put into a liquid will decompose it, and by the fact that one of the chief sources of electricity is the voltaic cell in which chemical combination occurs and charges are given out. Encyc. of Religion and Ethics vol. ii, pp. 208, 209. [s. '10.]

2. Very minute; infinitesimal; also, simple; elemental. at"om-at'ic‡; a-tom'i-cal‡.

— atomic heat, the specific heat of an atom of a chemical element as compared with that of an atom of hydrogen: obtained by multiplying the specific heat of the element by its atomic weight. It is practically the same in nearly every element, approximating 6.4.— a. or atomistic philosophy, the philosophy of atomism. See ATOMISM.— a. theory (Chem.), the doctrine of definite combining proportions, or the theory that chemical elements unite with one another, atom by atom, and in definite simple proportions.— a. value, see VALENCE.— a. volume, or specific volume, the space occupied by a quantity of an element as compared with its atomic weight: obtained by dividing the specific gravity of the element by its atomic weight.— a. weight, the weight of an atom of a chemical element as compared with that of an atom of hydrogen. See COMBINING WEIGHT, under COMBINE.— a-tom'i-cal-ly, adv. In an atomic manner; as or regarded as an atom or atoms.—

at"om-ic'i-ty, 1 at'əm-is'ı-tı; 2 ăt'om-ĭc'i-ty, n. Chem. 1. The number of atoms in a molecule. 2. Valence. 3. In the molecule of a compound the number of replaceable atoms or groups.

A-tom"i-o-so'ma, 1 ə-tom'ı-o-sō'mə; 2 a-tŏm'i-o-sō'ma, n. pl. Same as MONOCYTTARIA.

at'om-ism, 1 at'əm-izm; 2 ăt'om-ĭsm, n. 1. The philosophy which attempts to account for all material existence, or even for the entire universe, as constituted of simple, indivisible, and minute particles or atoms. Atomism is one of the most ancient of philosophical doctrines. It was first clearly proclaimed by Leucippus and Democritus (about 460 B. C.), who explained everything as due to the ceaseless movement of atoms differing in shape, order, and position. Democritus held that even the soul consists of fine, round, and smooth atoms. This philosophy was further elaborated by the Epicureans, especially by the poet Lucretius (94–54 B. C.), in whose hands it became a perfected system of materialism.

The result of atomism in any form, dealing with any subject, is that the principle of uniformity is hunted down into the elements of things. W. K. CLIFFORD Lectures, Right and Wrong vol. ii, p. 139. [MACM. 1879.]

2. Existence as an atom; individualism.

at'om-ist, 1 at'əm-ist; 2 ăt'om-ĭst, n. An adherent of atomism; one who accepts the atomic theory or the atomic philosophy. at"om-i'clan‡.

It is a curious fact that the atomists, who are commonly regarded as the great materialists of antiquity, were actually the first to say distinctly that a thing might be real without being a body. BURNET Early Greek Philosophy p. 357. [A. & C. B. 1892.]

The modern materialists scarcely do more than illustrate and enforce from modern physics the ancient metaphysics of the Atomists and Epicureans. PORTER Am. Col. p. 51. [C. C. C. 1870.]

at"om-is'tic, 1 at'əm-is'tik; 2 ăt'om-ĭs'tic, a. 1. Pertaining to or composed of atoms or individuals; figuratively, considered in parts or fragments; separate.

The atomistic use of isolated texts to prove a system.
FARRAR Lives of the Fathers vol. i, p. 76. [MACM. 1889.]

2. Of or pertaining to atomism or the atomists. 3. Considered apart from the context, or out of its proper relations; separate. at"om-is'ti-cal‡.— -ti-cal-ly, adv.

at"om-i-za'[or -sa']tion, 1 at'əm-ı-zē'shən; 2 ăt'om-ızā'shon, n. 1. The process of reducing to atoms, or the state of separation into atoms. 2. Med. The reduction of a liquid to spray.

at'om-ize, 1 at'əm-aiz; 2 ăt'om-iz, vt. [-IZED, IZ'ING.] To reduce to atoms or atom-like particles; pulverize; spray; hence, to belittle; as, to atomize truth. at'om-ise‡.

at'om-iz"er or -is"er, 1 at'əm-aiz"ər; 2 ăt'om-iz"er, n. One who or that which reduces to atoms or fine particles; specif., a hand-sprayer, operated by compressing an air-bulb.

at"om-ol'o-gy, 1 at"əm-ol'o-ji, 2 ăt"om-ŏl'o-gy, n. The branch of science that treats of atoms; the doctrine of atoms. [< ATOM + -OLOGY.]

at'om-soul", n. See ATOM.

at'om-y¹, 1 at'əm-i; 2 ăt'om-y, n. [-IES, 1 -iz; 2 -iş, pl.] An atom or mote; hence, a mite or pigmy. [< L. atomi, pl. of atomus; see ATOM.]

Atomies

That buzz about our slumbers, like brain flies, Leaving us fancy-sick. KEATS Endymion bk. i, st. 26.

at'o-my², 1 at'o-mi; 2 ăt'o-my, n. [-MIES, 1 -miz; 2 -mis, pl.] An anatomy or skeleton; hence, a very lean or skeleton-like person or creature: an erroneously formed word, originating in a misunderstanding of anatomy as an atomy. [< ANATOMY.]

A'ton, 1 ā'ton; 2 ā'tŏn, n. Egypt. Myth. The sun's disk, whose worship Amenophis IV. (c. 1466 B. C.) introduced into Egypt.

The new dogmas were known as 'the teachings' and their tenets, as revealed in the poems composed in honor of the Aton, breathe the purest and most exalted monotheistic spirit.
A. H. GARDINER in Encyc. Brit. 11th ed. vol. ix, p. 52.

a-tone', 1 ə-tōn'; 2 a-tōn', v. [A-TONED'; A-TON'ING.] I. t. 1. To make expiation for; render satisfaction for; make amends for. 2. [Archaic.] To bring into harmony or agreement; propitiate; satisfy; appease.

Can naught but blood our foul atone?
SCOTT Lady of the Lake can. 5, st. 13.

So strives every gracious nature to atone itself with law.
LOWELL Anti-apis st. 3.

II. i. 1. To make an expiation or propitiation, as for sin or a sinner; make amends, reparation, or satisfaction, as for an offense or wrong; serve as a set-off, as for an error or defect.

Thy purpose hath atoned for thy hasty rashness.
SCOTT Ivanhoe ch. 34, p. 287. [P. & C.]

For too much wealth amid their poverty.
GEORGE ELIOT Legend of Jubal st. 36.

2. To be at one; agree.

At one, for 'reconciled,' is as old as Robert Mannyng: 'make an onement with God,' 'set at onement,' are expressions of the sixteenth century; and I am not aware that atonement and atone are of an earlier date. Further, atonement seems to have preceded atone. The latter nowhere occurs in the Bible.
F. HALL False Philology p. 5. [S. 1872.]

a-tone'ment, 1 ə-tōn'ment or -mənt; 2 a-tōn'ment, n. 1. The act of atoning, or its results. 2. That which atones; any satisfaction, amends, reparation, or expiation made for wrong or injury; something suffered, done, or given by way of propitiation or equivalent.

The least atonement I can make Is to become no longer free.
BYRON Lines to a Young Lady st. 7.

When a man has been guilty of any vice or folly, I think the best atonement he can make for it, is to warn others not to fall into the like. ADDISON Spectator Mar. 9, 1710.

3. Theol. (1) The expiation of sin and the propitiation of God by the incarnation, life, sufferings, and death of Christ; the obedience and death of Christ in behalf of sinners as the ground of redemption; in the narrow sense, the sacrificial work of Christ for sinners. In the theology of many, including nearly all Universalists and Unitarians, atonement signifies the act of bringing men to God, in contradistinction to the idea of reconciling an offended God to men.

Redemption implies the complete deliverance from the penalty power, and all the consequences, of sin; atonement is used in the sense of the sacrificial work, whereby the redemption from the condemning power of the law was insured.
H. B. SMITH Christian Theology p. 437. [A. & S. 1884.]

(2) The work of Christ in the reconciliation of God and man, considered as mediatorial rather than sacrificial, or as an uplifting moral power or influence upon the minds of men.

Th' answer, but dreamed of before, to creation's enigma,— Atonement! LONGFELLOW Children of the Lord's Supper st. 6.

The theories by which theologians attempt to explain the facts of the atonement are mainly three: (1) the Anselmian or sacrificial, that the atonement consists fundamentally in Christ's sacrifice for man's sins; (2) the remedial, that God, through the Incarnation, entered into humanity so as to eliminate sin by the ethical process of Christ's life and death, and make the human race at one with himself; (3) the Socinian or moral influence, that Christ's work consists in influencing men to lead better lives. The sacrificial theory takes two general forms: (a) the governmental, that Christ's work was intended to meet the demands of the law of God and make such a moral impression upon men in favor of the divine government as to render the forgiveness of man safe; (b) the satisfaction, that it was intended to satisfy divine justice and make the forgiveness of man possible and right. Manifold shades of opinion are embraced under these various theories.

4. Christian Science. See the quotation:

Atonement is the exemplification of man's unity with God, whereby man reflects divine Truth, Life, and Love.
MARY B. EDDY Science and Health p. 18. [A. v. s. '10.]

5. [Archaic.] Reconciliation; agreement.

SYN.: see PROPITIATION.

a-tone'ment-ist, n. [Rare.] One who holds the sacrificial or Calvinistic view of the atonement. [M.]

a-ton'ic, 1 ə-ton'ik; 2 a-tŏn'ic, a. 1. Philol. (1) Not accented. (2) Without tone or proper vocal sound; surd. 2. Pathol. Lacking tone, vigor, or nervous energy. [< LL. atonicus, < Gr. atonos, < a- priv. + teinō, stretch.]

a-ton'ic, n. 1. Philol. (1) An unaccented syllable or word. (2) An elementary sound that is not properly vocal or is merely breathed; a surd; breathing. 2. Med. A medicine alleviative of organic irritation or excitement.

a-ton'ing, 1 ə-tōn'iŋ; 2 a-tōn'ing, pa. Making atonement; expiating; reconciling.

at'o-ny, 1 at'o-ni; 2 ăt'o-ny, n. 1. Want of tone; lack or impairment of power or vigor, especially of contractile power; abnormal relaxation; as, muscular atony. 2. Lack of stress, as in a syllable. a-to'ni-a‡; a-to-nic'i-ty‡. — a-to'nied, a.

a-top', 1 ə-top'; 2 a-tŏp', adv. & prep. On the top; up above.

at-tack', 1 a-tak'; 2 ă-tăk', v. I. t. 1. To set upon or make an onset against with or as with force of arms; assault physically, or attempt violence to; specif., to take the initiative, as an army, in engaging (an enemy).

An animal when going to attack another . . . often makes itself appear terrible by erecting its hair. DARWIN Emotions p. 61. [A. 1873.]

2. To assail, as one's reputation or principles, with speech, writing, or other hostile action; censure. 3. To make a beginning upon; begin action upon, as a piece of work; set about; undertake; as, the teacher attacked his new duties with alacrity. 4. To begin to affect seriously or injuriously; cause to waste or decompose; seize; as, disease attacked him; acid attacks metal.

No fever can attack a perfectly sound body. DRUMMOND Pax Vobiscum p. 3. [J. P. 1890.]

II. i. To make an onset or assault; as, to attack with vigor. [< F. attaquer, for attacher; see ATTACH.]

Syn.: assail, assault, beleaguer, beset, besiege, charge, combat, encounter, fall upon, invade, set upon. A general invades a country by marching in troops; he attacks a city by drawing up an army against it; he assaults it by hurling his troops directly upon its defenses. Assail and assault, tho of the same original etymology, have diverged in meaning, so that assault alone retains the meaning of direct personal violence. One may assail another with reproaches; he assaults him with a blow, a brandished weapon, etc. Armies or squadrons charge; combat and encounter may be said of individual contests. To beset is to set around, or, so to speak, to stud one's path, with menaces, attacks, or persuasions. To bestepe and beleaguer are the acts of armies. To attack is to begin hostilities; to encounter is to meet face to face, and may be said either of the attacking or of the resisting force or person, or of both. — Ant.: aid, befriend, cover, defend, protect, resist, shelter, shield, support, sustain, uphold, withstand.— Prep.: we were attacked by the enemy with cannon and musketry.

at-tack', n. 1. The act of attacking; an onset, either with physical violence or with hostile or bitter words; specif., a military onset or commencement of assault; as, to write an attack upon conservatism.

The game of attack and defence, as it is still practiced with the sword and foil, opens up new vistas in history. Century Magazine Jan., 1887, p. 414.

2. (1) The first movements toward any undertaking, as the solution of a difficulty or the offensive part in any contest. (2) The manner of beginning a phrase or passage in music with decision and spirit. (3) In phonetics, the voicing of a sound; an opening glide.

II. i. 1. To arrive or reach with effort; succeed in getting to any point or thing: followed usually by to or unto.

Wisdom is his most beauteous attribute: no man can attain unto it. T. BROWNE Religio Medici pt. i, § 13, p. 337. [M. & B. 1852.]

Syn.: accomplish, achieve, acquire, arrive at, compass, earn, gain, get, grasp, master, obtain, procure, reach, secure, win. A man may obtain a situation by the intercession of friends, he procures a dinner by paying for it; attain is a lofty word, pointing to some high or desirable result; he attains the mountain summit, he attains honor or learning as the result of strenuous and earnest labor. Even that usage of attain which has been thought to refer to mere progress of time carries the thought of a result desired; as, to attain to old age; the man desires to live to a good old age; we should not speak of his attaining his dotage. One may attain an object that will prove not worth his labor, but what he achieves is in itself great and splendid; as, the Greeks at Marathon achieved a glorious victory. See ACCOMPLISH; ACHIEVE; ARRIVE; GET.— Ant.: abandon, blunder, fail, forfeit, lose, miss.— at-tain'er, n.

at-tain'der, 1 a-tēn'dər; 2 ă-tān'dẽr, n. 1. Eng. Law. The immediate extinction by the common law of all civil rights of a person, as one dead in law, upon the pronouncing of sentence of death or of outlawry against him for a capital offense; also, a bill of attainder.

The consequences of attainder were, by common law, forfeiture of estate and corruption of blood, by reason of which latter the person attainted could neither inherit nor transmit property by descent. These consequences of attainder have been so modified by recent legislation that, so far as the offender's family is concerned, corruption of blood has ceased to be a part of the law. In the United States bills or legislative acts of attainder are forbiddenby the Constitution (Art. I, § 9, cl. 13). Attainder was finally abolished in England in 1870.

The aged earl died in the Tower, . . . and a posthumous attainder being issued against him, his lands and goods were forfeited. LUCY AIKEN Court of Queen Elizabeth p. 25. [A. M. & S. 1869.]

2. [Archaic.] The imputing of dishonor; the condition of being under such imputation or stain; as, attainder of shame.

He lived from all attainder of suspects. SHAKESPEARE King Richard III. act. iii, sc. 5.

[< OF. ataindre; see ATTAIN, v.]— bill of attainder (Eng. Law), an act of Parliament pronouncing sentence of death against an accused person, especially against political offenders of high degree, which enactment is followed by forfeiture of estate and corruption of blood, as in attainder under judicial sentence.

at-tain'ment, 1 a-tēn'ment or -mənt; 2 ă-tān'ment, n. 1. The act of attaining or reaching; the act of obtaining, as by continued effort. 2. That which is thus attained or obtained; especially, an acquisition of a personal or non-transmissible character, as of proficiency, scholarship, or power; an accomplishment; as, a man of great attainments.

What is thy attainment compared with an Alexander's, a Mahomet's, a Napoleon's? CARLYLE Reminiscences p. 35. [S. 1881.]

Syn.: accomplishment, acquirement, acquisition. These words, tho admitting the singular, are oftenest used in the plural. Accomplishments are showy, graceful, pleasing; acquirements are substantial and useful; attainments are vast, lofty, and ennobling. Acquisitions, unless otherwise expressly stated, are understood to be of money or property. See ACHIEVEMENT; PROGRESS.

at-tain'or, 1 a-tēn'or; 2 ă-tān'ŏr, n. [Archaic.] Eng. Law. A juror called under a writ of attaint ordering a new trial.

2. To try to overcome, master, win, seduce, or take by force; attack; assault; make an effort against; as, to attempt a fort. 3. To make an essay of, or adventure upon, as something perilous or untried; as, to "attempt the Future's portal," LOWELL Present Crisis st. 18. 4†. To endeavor to gain; test; prove.

II†. i. To make an attempt. [< F. attenter, < L. attento, < ad, to, + tento, try, freq. of tendo, stretch.]

Syn.: endeavor, essay, strive, try, undertake. To attempt expresses a single act; to endeavor, a continuous exertion; we say I will endeavor (not I will attempt) while I live. To attempt is with the view of accomplishing; to essay, with a view of testing our own powers. To undertake is to accept or take upon oneself as an obligation, as some business, labor, or trust; the word often implies complete assurance of success; as, I will undertake to produce the witness. To strive suggests little of the result, much of toil, strain, and contest, in seeking it; I will strive to fulfil your wishes, i. e., I will spare no labor and exertion to do it. Try is the most comprehensive of these words. The original idea of testing or experimenting is not thought of when a man says "I will try." To attempt suggests giving up, if the thing is not accomplished at a stroke; to try implies using other means and studying out other ways if not at first successful. Endeavor is more mild and formal; the pilot in the burning pilot-house does not say "I will endeavor" or "I will attempt to hold the ship to her course," but "I'll try, sir!" — Ant.: abandon, dismiss, drop, give up, let go, neglect, omit, overlook, pass by, throw away, throw over, throw up. — at-tempt'a-bl(e‍ᵊ, a. — at-tempt'er, n. 1. One who attempts. 2. One who makes a criminal attempt; an assailant. 3†. A tempter. at-temp'tor†. — at-tempt'ing, I. pa. Venturous; enterprising. II. n. An attempt; endeavor. — at-temp'tiv(e‍ᵊ, a. Ready for bold attempts; venturous.

Daniel (1603), among other grand qualities which he ascribes to the English race, describes them as 'attemptive,' or prompt for high attempts. FRENCH English, Past and Present lect. v, p. 230. [L. P. CO. 1889.]

at-tempt', n. 1. A putting forth of effort, especially of unsuccessful effort, to effect or to do something or to attain an end; an undertaking; trial; endeavor; essay.

The poorest success, provided the attempt has been genuine, will enable one to enter into any art ten times better than before.
MACDONALD Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood p. 236. [S. & S.]

2. An effort to effect an object or purpose by violence; an attack; assault. 3. Law. An act which, if consummated, would effectuate a criminal intent; as, an attempt to commit a crime. Criminal attempt is distinguished from criminal intent in that the former implies a physical endeavor to accomplish an act, the latter the quality or condition of mind with which the endeavor is made or the act done. 4†. The object attempted or aimed at. Syn.: see EFFORT.

at-tempt"a-bil'i-ty, 1 a-tempt'ə-bil'i-ti; 2 ă-tĕmpt'a-bil'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being attemptable. 2. That which may be attempted.

at-ten'tat, 1 a-ten'tat; 2 ă-tĕn'tăt, n. [F.] 1. Civ. & Canon Law. An improper step in a cause, taken by a judge of an inferior court, pending an appeal. 2†. An assault; a criminal attempt. at-ten'tate‡.

at-ten'tion, 1 a-ten'shon; 2 ă-tĕn'shon, n. 1. The direction of the mental powers to a specific object or objects, especially when vigorous, voluntary, and concentrated; close or earnest attending.

Attention . . . is another term for tension or effort, and was doubtless first transferred to the spiritual operation from the strained condition of the part or whole of the bodily organism, which accompanies or follows such effort.
PORTER Human Intellect prelim., § 53, p. 69. [S. 1870.]

Thus the difference between an ordinary mind and the mind of a Newton, consists principally in this, that the one is capable of the application of a more continuous attention than the other.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. xiv, p. 178. [O. & L. 1859.]

2. Psychol. (1) The act or process of giving especial clearness to one or more particulars in the complex content of consciousness. (2) The form of mental functioning, or so-called faculty, which makes possible the selection of certain of the contents of consciousness, for the purpose of giving to them an increased clearness.

The general fact of experience from which the conception and doctrine of attention in modern psychology take their rise is that some objects, or parts of objects, in the field of consciousness are more clearly and vividly impressed than others, or are apperceived and recognized, while others are only dimly, or scarcely at all, apprehended. The additional fact that this difference in clearness often seems to be dependent on a selective act, or process, of the subject has led to a further division into (a) reflex or non-voluntary attention, where either through the intensity of the stimulus or the advantage of special interest, the object seems to force itself upon the mind; or (b) voluntary a., where the subject, in order to gratify curiosity or carry out some other purpose, seems to choose the object which shall be more clearly apperceived. The distinction, tho valid, is a matter of degrees. In the one case, the consciousness of passivity, in the other, of activity, is emphasized.

The conclusion is then warranted, in a preliminary way, that primary attention is a form of psychical energy which necessarily enters into the determination of the character of every field of consciousness.
G. T. LADD Psychol. Descrip. and Explan. ch. 5, p. 65. [S. 1894.]

The word attention, if we consider its derivation, would seem to be a synonym of conation. It ought to mean 'tendency toward an object.' G. F. STOUT Analytic Psychology vol. i, ch. 6, p. 122. [SON. & CO. 1896.]

3. An act of courtesy or gallantry, especially on the part of a lover; a service: often in the plural; as, his attentions were assiduous. 4. Devotion of the energies; watchful observation; practical consideration; notice; also, the object to which the service is directed.

His [Spenser's] attention to metre and rhythm is sometimes . . . extremely minute. COLERIDGE Table Talk July 24, 1827.

5. Mil. An order to assume a posture of readiness preparatory to some military maneuver; also, the posture itself; as, the company stood at attention. See TACTICS.

The commanding officer . . . said: 'Attention, men! your colors are on the top of that hill. Charge!' And they did charge.
J. B. GOUGH Platform Echoes p. 238. [W. & CO. 1886.]

At'tis, 1 at'is; 2 ăt'is, n. Myth. A Phrygian deity of youth and vegetation who either killed himself or was killed by a wild boar. His spirit entered a pine-tree and from his blood sprang violets. An annual festival was held in spring to commemorate his death and resurrection. Compare ADONIS. At'ys†.

at'ti-tude, 1 at'i-tūd; 2 ăt'i-tūd, n. 1. Physical position, as of the body; mode of standing, sitting, lying, or being placed; especially, in art, the posture or composition of a figure, as suggesting some mental state or physical action.

Originally a technical term of the arts of design, substituted for the earlier aptitude, and thence extended into general use. [M.]

A great man is a new statue in every attitude and action.

EMERSON Essays, Art in first series, p. 287. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

2. Any habitual mode of regarding anything; any settled behavior or conduct, as indicating opinion or purpose regarding anything.

A European cannot spend an evening in an American drawing-room without perceiving that the attitude of men to women is not that with which he is familiar at home.

BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. ii, pt. vi, p. 504. [MACM. 1888.]

3. Aero. The angle of incidence formed by an aeroplane surface with the machine's line of motion, or with the machine's stance on the ground. LOUGHEED Vehicles of the Air p. 466. [R. & B. '09.] [F., < It. attitudine, < LL. aptitudo; see APTITUDE.]

Syn.: pose, position, posture. Position as applied to the arrangement or situation of the human body or limbs may denote that which is conscious or unconscious, of the living or the dead; but we do not speak of the attitude, pose, or posture of a corpse, unless, in some rare case, we might say the body was found in a sitting posture, where the posture is thought of as assumed in life, or as, at first glance, suggesting life. A posture is assumed without any special reference to expression of feeling; as, an erect posture, a reclining posture; attitude is the position appropriate to the expression of some feeling; the attitude may be unconsciously taken through the strength of the feeling; as, an attitude of defiance; or it may be consciously assumed in the attempt to express the feeling; as, he assumed an attitude of humility. A pose is a position studied for artistic effect, or considered with reference to such effect; the unconscious posture of a spectator or listener may be an admirable pose from an artist's standpoint.— flying attitude (Aero.), the angle of incidence of an aeroplane surface when the machine has risen from the ground: in distinction from ground attitude.— ground a. (Aero.), the angle of incidence of the surface of an aeroplane before leaving the ground: in distinction from flying attitude. LOUGHEED Vehicles of the Air p. 468. [R. & B.] — to strike an a., to assume a posture artificially or for effect.— at"ti-tu'di-nal, a. Of or relating to attitude.

at"ti-tu"di-na'ri-an, 1 at'i-tiū'di-nē'ri-ən; 2 ăt'i-tū'dinā'ri-an, n. One who studies and practises attitudes; an attitudinizer.— at"ti-tu"di-na'ri-an-ism, n.

His [Cotton Mather's] educational discipline was less methodical than Mill's and even more likely to make the son a juvenile attitudinarian and sayer of smart things. C. F. RICHARDSON Am. Literature vol. i, ch. 4, p. 131. [G. P. P. 1888.]

at"ti-tu'di-nize, 1 at'i-tiū'di-nqiz; 2 ăt'i-tū'di-nīz, vi. [-NIZED, -NIZ"ES; -NIZ"ING.] To strike attitudes; pose for effect. -nise†. — -ni-za"[or-sa"-]tion, n.— -niz"er or nis"er, n.

at-tor'ney, n. 1. A person designated and empowered by another to act in his stead; a representative; especially, one legally appointed and formally authorized to transact business for another.

A distinction is made between a private attorney or attorney in fact and a public attorney or attorney at law, the latter being qualified to prosecute and defend actions in a court of law, while the former is limited to business out of court. In England, under the terms of the Judicature Act of 1873, the title attorney was merged with that of solicitor. Since that time all persons admitted as attorneys, solicitors, or proctors, have been designated solicitors of the supreme court. In the United States, where the term barrister is not used, the terms attorney and counsel are practically interchangeable. In equity proceedings the attorney or counsel is called a solicitor; in admiralty, a proctor.

2. [W. Ind.] A general manager of a plantation. [< OF. atorné, pp. of atorner; see ATTORN.] at-tor'ney†; at-tur'ney†.— district attorney [U. S.], the law-officer representing either a State or the national government within a designated district; as, United States district attorney for the third judicial district.— power of a., legal written authority to transact business for another person.— prosecuting a. [U. S.], the law-officer empowered to act in behalf of the government, whether State, county, or national, in prosecutions for penal offenses.— Scotch a. (Bot.), any one of various West-Indian vines or twining shrubs of the genus Clusia, which kill the trees about whose trunks they twine.— State's a. [U. S.], a lawyer chosen and commissioned to represent the State in the courts, especially in criminal prosecutions.— stock power of a. [U. at-tourne'†, vt. To return.

at-tract', 1 a-trākt'; 2 ă-trăct', v. I. t. 1. Physics. To draw to or toward itself, or cause to adhere without the agency of any visible or known mechanical connection; as, the magnet attracts iron; the sun and planets attract each other.

That a piece of amber, when rubbed, will attract and then repel light bodies, was a fact known six hundred years before Christ.

DRAPER Conflict bet. Religion and Science p. 311. [A. 1876.]

2. To draw by influencing the mind; affect favorably, as by the exhibition of pleasing attributes or qualities; charm; allure; win.

He [John] had a strange gift of attracting friends.

GREEN Short Hist. p. 148. [H. 1875.]

She was . . . lovely to attract Thy love, not thy subjection.

MILTON P. L. bk. x, l. 152.

3. To draw toward itself or oneself, as by the possession or exertion of some quality or power; as, sugar attracts flies; public folly attracts ridicule.

The words in prose ought to express the intended meaning, and no more; if they attract attention to themselves, it is, in general, a fault. COLERIDGE Table Talk July 3, 1833.

4†. To absorb. 5†. To draw by direct mechanical means.

II. i. To exert attractive influence or power of any kind; as, her pleasing manners attract. [< L. attractus, pp. of attraho, < ad, to, + traho, draw.]

Syn.: see ALLURE; DRAW; INTEREST; INVITE.— Prep.: attracted to one by his goodness.— at-tract"a-bil'i-ty, at-tract'a-bl(e-ness[E], n.— at-tract'a-bl(e[E], a. Subject or susceptible to attraction.— at-tract'er, n. One who or that which attracts. at-trac'tor†.— at-trac'tile, a. Having power to attract.— at-tract'ing, pa. That attracts.— at-tract'ing-ly, adv.— at-trac'to-ry†, a.

at-trac'tion, 1 a-trak'shən; 2 ă-trăc'shon, n. 1. The act or process of attracting; attractive power or property; as, the magnet has attraction for iron; beauty has an attraction for all. 2. Physics. A force exercised mutually upon each other by two bodies or particles tending to make them approach each other or to prevent their separating.

Men have been able to detect a planet by means of the disturbances produced by its attraction acting on the planet which travels nearest to it. PROCTOR Expanse of Heaven p. 122. [A. 1874.]

3. That which attracts or draws; an attractive object or quality; esp., a pleasing or alluring object, quality, or characteristic; as, the play was the attraction. 4. Psychol. In the Associational School, the supposed influence of ideas upon one another.

Syn.: allurement, charm, drawing, enticement, fascination, inclination, tendency.— Ant.: aversion, disinclination, dislike, hatred, loathing, opposition, repugnance, repulsion. — Prep.: the attraction of gravitation; the attraction between certain objects; war has an attraction for bold spirits.

— adhesive attraction (Physics.), same as ADHESION. Compare COHESION.— a. of compositiont (Chem.), chemical attraction.— a. of gravitation, see GRAVITATION.— attrac'tion-sphere", n. Embryol. A minute spherical mass observed near the nucleus of many cells that appears to control the phenomena of indirect division; centrosphere.— chemical a., the mutual affinity of atoms that causes them to unite into molecules forming compounds.— cohesive a., that acting mutually among the ultimate particles of matter, causing them to cohere.— crystallic a., the attractive force with which large crystalline particles draw smaller ones of the same kind in alloys or other crystalline solids.— electrodynamic a., the mutual attraction of electric currents, or of conductors through which they are passing.— electrostatic a., the mutual attraction between unlike electric charges, or between bodies having such charges.— magnetic a., the mutual attraction between unlike magnetic poles.— mass or molar a., mutual attraction of any kind between masses of matter, as gravitational or magnetic attraction.— molecular a., mutual attraction between molecules, as cohesion. — Newtonian a., the attraction of universal gravitation: so called when necessary to distinguish it from other attractions, such as those of magnetism, cohesion, etc.— at-trac'tion-al-ly, adv. [Rare.] By means of attraction; with attractive force.

at-trac'tive, } 1 a-trak'tiv; 2 ă-trăc'tiv, a. 1. Having at-trac'tive^{s}, } the power or quality of attracting; drawing forth sympathy, affection, or interest; as, an attractive face; attractive style.

The scenery was so grand and solemn, the life so novel, the character of the people so attractive.
BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. i, intro., p. 9. [MACM. 1889.]

2. Having the power or property of exerting physical attraction; drawing; as, the sun's attractive power.

By his attractive virtue. MILTON P. L. bk. viii, l. 124.

3†. Drawing by visible mechanical means.

SYN.: agreeable, alluring, beautiful, captivating, charming, engaging, enticing, fascinating, interesting, inviting, pleasant, pleasing, tempting, winning. at-trib'ute, 1 a-trib'yut; 2 ă-trĭb'yut, vt. [-UT-ED; -UT-ING.] To ascribe (something) as due and belonging, as goodness to God; to impute (something) as produced or caused by, or owing to, as follies to errors of judgment; assign, as an effect to a cause.

He [Talleyrand] attributes his own reputation for wit a good deal to the power of holding his tongue.

SYN.: ascribe, assign, associate, charge, connect, impute, refer. 'We may attribute to a person either that which really belongs to him or that which we merely suppose to be his. We attribute to God infinite power. We may attribute a wrong intent to an innocent person. We may attribute a result, rightly or wrongly, to a certain cause; in such case, however, attribute carries always a concession of uncertainty. Where we are quite sure, we simply refer a matter to the cause or class to which it belongs. Many diseases formerly attributed to witchcraft are now referred to the action of micro-organisms. We may attribute a matter in silent thought; we ascribe anything openly in speech or writing; King Saul said of the singing women, "They have ascribed unto David ten thousands, and to me they have ascribed but thousands." We associate things which may have no necessary or causal relation; as, we may associate the striking of a clock with the serving of dinner, tho the two are not necessarily connected. We charge a person with what we deem to be blameworthy. We may impute good or evil, but more commonly evil.— ANT.: deny, disconnect, dissociate, separate, sever, sunder.— PREP.: It is uncharitable to attribute evil motives to (or unto) others.

at'tri-bute, 1 at'rı-biūt; 2 ăt'ri-būt, n. 1. That which is attributed; that which is considered as belonging to, inherent in, or characteristic of a person or thing; a characteristic; in loose usage, a quality; as, the attributes of God; extension is an attribute of matter. See synonyms.

The term attribute simply directs the attention to the fact that we attribute to, or affirm of, a being, something which we distinguish from itself; but what we distinguish, or what it is distinguished from, is in no way explained.
PORTER Human Intellect pt. iv, p. 621. [S. 1890.]

DRYDEN The Medal l. 92.

2. Art & Myth. A distinctive mark or symbol added to or accompanying a figure as characteristic of it; as, the hammer is the attribute of Thor, the egis of Athena, the lyre of Apollo, etc. 3. Gram. An adjective or equivalent of an adjective; an attributive adjunct; a word expressive of quality or characteristic, as old soldier, iron duke, Havelock the hero, etc. See ADJECTIVE. 4. Logic. That which is predicated of anything; the affirmed quality, state, or accident of the subject. See under SPINOZISM. 5. Metaph. A quality indispensable to material or spiritual substance, as constituting its so-called essence.

For attribute is that which the intellect perceives of substance, as if constituting its essence, and therefore it must be conceived through itself.
SPINOZA Ethic trans. by White and Stirling, p. 8. [TR. & CO. 1883.]

6†. Honor; credit; repute. [< L. attributum, neut. of attributus; see ATTRIBUTE, v.]

SYN.: property, quality. A quality (L. qualis, such)— the "suchness" of anything, according to the German idiom — denotes what a thing really is in some one respect; an attribute is what we conceive a thing to be in some one respect; thus, while attribute may, quality must, express something of the real nature of that to which it is ascribed; we speak of the attributes of God, the qualities of matter. "Originally 'the attributes of God' was preferred, probably, because men assumed no knowledge of the actual qualities of the Deity, but only of those more or less fitly attributed to him." J. A. H. MURRAY. [M.] Holiness is an attribute of God; the attributes of many heathen deities have been only the qualities of wicked men joined to superhuman power. A property (L. proprius, one's own) is what belongs especially to one thing as its own peculiar possession, in distinction from all other things; when we speak of the qualities or the properties of matter, quality is the more general, property the more limited term. A quality is inherent; a property may be transient; physicists now, however, prefer to term those qualities manifested by all bodies (such as impenetrability, extension, etc.), general properties of matter, while those peculiar to certain substances or to certain states of those substances (as fluidity, malleability, etc.) are termed specific properties; in this wider use of the word property, it becomes strictly synonymous with quality. See CHARACTERISTIC; EMBLEM.— ANT.: being, essence, nature, substance.

at"tri-bu'tion, 1 at'rı-biū'shən; 2 ăt'ri-bū'shon, n. 1. The act of attributing, as a property, quality, or characteristic to a person or thing, a work to its author or supposed author, date, or place, or an effect to its cause; ascription; as, the attribution of intelligence to man.

Nationality and peculiarities marked by immemorial attribution.

au-ro'ra, 1 o-rō'rə; 2 ą-rō'ra, n. 1. A phenomenon of the atmosphere, often seen at night in high latitudes, and less frequently in other parts of the world: called specifically aurora borealis (1 bō'ri-ē'lis; 2 bō"re-ā'lis) (northern lights) and aurora australis (1 ōs-trē'lis; 2 ąs-trā'lis) (southern lights), while the generic term aurora polaris (1 po-lē'ris; 2 po-lā'ris) (polar lights) is used of both.

It comprises irregular patches and dancing columns of light of rapidly changing forms, and is due probably to electric discharges. Its beams, often of various hues, are found to be virtually parallel to the free magnetic needle. During extensive displays there is often such electric disturbance as to interfere with the working of the telegraph. The frequency of auroras is supposed to be variable, with a period of about 11 years, corresponding almost exactly with that of the frequency of sun-spots. For this reason, among others, it is supposed that some connection exists between the two. See CORONA, 5, and MERRY DANCERS.

The aurora assumes an endless variety of forms which have been classified as follows: auroral arch, a luminous arc lying across the magnetic meridian; auroral band, generally broader and much more irregular than the arch; sometimes resembling a curtain waving in the wind; filaments and streamers, at right angles to the arch or band; the corona, a luminous circle near the zenith; auroral clouds, indistinct nebulous masses, which may occur in any part of the heavens; the dark segment, the segment of sky lying beneath an auroral arch; auroral glow, a luminous appearance high up in the sky, the filaments diverging toward the zenith; sheaves ("fans," "flames," "feathers"), separate bundles of filaments or streamers of various shapes. The movements of light in the aurora were distinguished by Weyprecht as waves when running horizontally, and as flashes when shooting vertically.

2. Originally, the rising light or roseate glow of early morning in the eastern sky; dawn; hence, the beginning, rise, or first period of anything.

We sat in the aurora of a sunrise which was to put out all the stars. EMERSON Essays, The Poet second series, p. 16. [H. M. & CO.]

3. [A-] Myth. The Roman goddess of the dawn, corresponding to the Greek Eos, the herald of the day.

The famed Tithonus, brought the light of day
To men and to immortals.
HOMER Odyssey tr. by Bryant, bk. v, l. 1.

4. A reddish or rosy color. 5. Elec. A form of high voltage electric discharge which assumes the appearance of the aurora borealis. [L., dawn.] —aurora glory (Meteor.), same as CORONA, 5 (3). —au-ro'ra-shell", n. An ear-shell or haliotid. —Aurora's tears, the morning dew. —a.-tube, n. A tube, preferably of uranium glass, electric discharges through which produce the effect of an aurora.

Au-ro'ra, n. 1. A feminine personal name. F. Au"rore', 1 ō'rōr', 2 ō'rōr'; G. It. au-thig'e-nous, 1 ė-thij'e-nus; 2 ą-thiġ'e-nūs, a. Same as AUTHIGENIC, 2.

au'thor, 1 ē'thar; 2 ą'thor, n. 1. One who begins, forms, or originates; creator; prime mover; first cause; as, God is the author of all finite being.

The other example is that which is called Verner's Law, after the name of its author, Karl Verner of Copenhagen.
EARLE English Prose p. 120. [G. P. P. 1891.]

2. The original writer or composer of a book, treatise, or document, as distinguished from an editor, compiler, or translator; specif., one who makes original composition, especially of books or permanent literature, a profession or specialty; as, who is the author of the book?

None but an author knows an author's cares.
COWPER Progress of Error l. 518.

The author who speaks about his own books is almost as bad as a mother who talks about her own children.
BENJ. DISRAELI Speech delivered Nov. 19, 1870.

3. An author's writings collectively.

It often happens that such stories . . . are found in the Greek and Roman authors. BULFINCH Age of Fable p. 2. [S. W. T.]

4. pl. A game played by two to twelve persons, with a pack of 72 specially prepared cards divided into books, each book devoted to a different author. 5. Scots Law. One from whom title to property is derived otherwise than by inheritance: the opposite of ancestor. 6. [Archaic.] An informant; one responsible for a statement. 7†. An editor. [< OF. autor, < L. auctor, < augeo, increase.] au'tour†.

SYN.: composer, writer, inventor. See CAUSE.

— au'thor-ta"ble, n. In library-cataloging, a scheme giving to each work its own exclusive book-number, so contrived that the books stand on the shelves alphabeted by authors under each subject. In library-catalog use various practically self-explaining compounds have author as the first element; as, author-card, a.-catalog, a.-entry, a.-heading, a.-mark. — au'thor-craft", n. The skill or work of an author. — au'thor-hood, n. Authorship. — au-tho'ri-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or like an author. au'thor-ly‡; au-to'ri-al‡. — au-tho'ri-al-ly, adv. After the manner of an author. — au'thor-ish, a. Tending toward authorship. — au'thor-ism, n. [Rare.] The character of an author; authorship. — au'thor-let, n. An insignificant writer. au'thor-ling‡. — au'thor-like, a. Becoming or suitable to an author.

The love of exercising power has been found to be so universal, that no class of men who have possessed authority have been able to avoid abusing it. BUCKLE Hist. Civ. vol. i, p. 203. [A. 1866.]

2. The power derived from intellectual or moral superiority, from reputation, or from whatever else commands influence, respect, or esteem; as, the authority of wisdom.

There are persons who think it a strong objection against the authority of Scripture, that it is not composed by rules of art, agreed upon by critics. BUTLER Analogy p. 188. [C. BROS.]

3. The person or company of persons in whom government or command is vested; as, the civil authorities.

4. That which is or may be appealed to in support of action or opinion, as a scientist, an author, volume, statement, document, etc.; as, he is an authority on nervous disease; the book is authority on church history.

An authority in any department of thought is one who has had special opportunities of acquaintance with that department, has shown special ability and mastery in it, and is free from prejudices. An argument from authority is based upon the statements of others concerning matters of opinion which they have reached by rational processes, and is to be distinguished from testimony, which consists of the statements of others concerning matters of fact.

LUCY AIKEN Court of Queen Elizabeth p. 111. [A. M. & S. 1869.]

Med.* Self-lavage.— au-tol'o-gy, n. The scientific study or knowledge of oneself.— au-tol'o-gist, n.— au"to-lu"mi-nes'cence, n. Luminescence due to chemical or other action within the luminescent body, as opposed to that due to outside stimulus.— au"to-lu"mi-nes'cent, a.

Au-tol'y-cus, 1 ɔ-tel'ı-kus; 2 ą-tŏl'y-cŭs, n. 1. A Greek astronomer and mathematician of Pitane who flourished about 330 B. C. and wrote treatises on the revolving sphere and on the rising and setting of the fixed stars. 2. In Shakespeare's Winter's Tale, a light-fingered rogue who snapped up "unconsidered trifles." 3. Myth. The master of thieves, son of Hermes and grandfather of Ulysses, who could metamorphose his plunder or render it invisible.

au-tol'y-sis, 1 ɔ-tel'ı-sis; 2 ą-tŏl'y-sĭs, n. Intracellular digestion: the breaking up of tissues by ferments existing in the cells themselves.— au"to-lyt'ic, a.

au-tol'y-tus, 1 ɔ-tel'ı-tus; 2 ą-tŏl'y-tŭs, n. Helminth. A genus of sylid chætopodous annelids, in which reproduction takes place asexually by the formation of new segments. [< AUTO- + Gr. lytos, dissolvable.]

au"to-man'u-al, a. Relating to a system of railroad signals operated by hand, but which come back automatically to warning position.— au'to-mat, n. 1. An automatic device: applied to various articles, as a camera-shutter, etc. 2. A restaurant in which food is automatically delivered by coin-in-slot device.— au'to-math, n. [Rare.] One whose knowledge is self-acquired.

au"to-mat'ic, 1 ô"to-mat'ık; 2 ą"to-măt'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like an automaton. Specif.: (1) Acting as an automaton, or from forces inherent in or placed within itself; self-moving or self-regulating under necessary law; as, an automatic register. (2) Acting mechanically, as opposed to rationally or volitionally; done from force of habit; as, the performance of the musician becomes automatic. (3) Physiol. Not effected, or not controlled, by volition; spontaneous; reflex; as, respiration is automatic.

It has never occurred to any physiologist to doubt that certain motions and actions in man are automatic.

CHAS. ELAM Winds of Doctrine p. 18. [S. E. & CO. 1886.]

2. Carried on or performed by self-acting machinery; as, an automatic loom. [< Gr. automatos; see AUTOMATON. au'to-mate†; au"to-mat'i-cal†; au-tom'a-tous†.

Syn.: see SPONTANEOUS.— automatic contact-breaker, a device for causing an electric current to make and break its own circuit.— a. cut-out, a device by which an electric circuit is either opened or short-circuited, when a current passes through it, thus causing an electric current to open and close its own circuit.— a. switch. 1. Elec. A switch to shunt or to reverse a current automatically. 2. A track-switch operated by a train while in motion.— au"to-mat'i-cal-ly, adv. In an automatic manner; as or like an automaton; hence, with spontaneous or unconscious action: involuntarily.— au"to-ma-tic'i-ty, n. The quality or condition of being automatic; automatism. au-tom'a-cy†.

au-tom'a-tism, 1 ɔ-tom'ə-tizm; 2 ą-tŏm'a-tĭşm, n. 1. The state or quality of being automatic, or of having no voluntary action; involuntary action. Specifically: (1) In philosophy, the Cartesian doctrine that animals are automata, or act as mere machines under necessary laws, their actions being uncontrolled by consciousness. (2) The theory of the self-motion of phenomena.

The automatism of the primary constitution is such that previous experience and conscious effort are not needed. LEWES Physical Basis of Mind problem iii, p. 372. [o. & co. 1877.]

2. Physiol. (1) A mechanism by which automatic acts, such as winking, are performed without voluntary control; also, the action of such a mechanism. (2) Such automatic movements induced by external stimulation. 3. Pathol. Mechanical or purposeless action resulting from disease, as epilepsy or forms of insanity. 4. Psychophysics. (1) Involuntary movements, whether accompanied or not by consciousness, which are centrally initiated, as distinguished from those which are reflex. (2) The state or condition accompanying such subconscious phenomena. (3) The phenomena themselves. 5. The capacity of independently originating action or motion.

au-tom'a-tist, 1 ɔ-tom'ə-tist; 2 ą-tŏm'a-tist, n. 1. One who believes in Cartesian automatism. 2. A maker of automatons.

au-tom'a-tize or -tise, 1 ɔ-tom'ə-taiz; 2 ą-tŏm'a-tiz, vt. [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] To reduce to an automaton.

au-tom'a-ton, 1 ɔ-tom'ə-ten; 2 ą-tŏm'a-tŏn, n. [-TONS or -TA, pl.] 1. Any automatic mechanism; especially, a mechanical toy made to imitate actions of living beings.

Many books . . . might as well have been written by an automaton as a man. PORTER Books and Reading p. 23. [S. 1873.]

2. Any living being whose actions are or appear to be involuntary or mechanical: said especially of a person following mere routine. 3. Anything viewed as capable of spontaneous movement or action. [L., also automatum, < Gr. automaton, neut. of automatos, < autos, self, + maō* (perf. memaa), strive after.]

Au-tom'e-don, 1 ɔ-tom'ı-don; 2 ą-tŏm'e-dŏn, n. [Gr.] Myth. The charioteer of Achilles, and, according to Vergil, the comrade in arms of Pyrrhus, son of Achilles.

au-tom'e-ter, n. The speed-indicator of a motor-vehicle.— au-tom'e-try, n. 1. Self-measurement; self-estimation. 2. Delineation of figures in terms of their entire height.— au"to-met'ric, a.

au"to-mixte' car, 1 ô'to-mikst'; 2 ą'to-mikst'. A motor-car fitted with the automixte system. — automixte system (Mech.), a method of storing for use the excess power of a gasoline-engine on a motor-car by which a reversible dynamo that charges a storage-battery is driven. When auxiliary power is required it is obtained by reversing the dynamo. It was devised by Henri Pieper, of Belgium. Pieper system†.

au"tom-ne'sia, 1 ô'tom-nI'zha; 2 ą'tŏm-nē'sha, n. Psychol. The spontaneous recollection of a previous condition of life. [< AUTO- + mnēsis, memory.]

au"to-mo'bile, 1 ô"to-mō'bil or -mo-bil'; 2 ą'to-mō'bil or -mo-bil', vi. [-BILED; -BIL-ING.] To drive or ride in an automobile.

au"to-mo'bile, 1 ô"to-mō'bil; 2 ą"to-mō'bil, a. Capable of moving itself by internal forces; self-propelling; self-moving: applied to motor vehicles, such as carriages and cycles of those types usually or formerly propelled by horses or men. [< AUTO- + L. mobilis; cp. MOBILE.]

au"to-mo-bile', 1 ô"to-mo-bil' or -mō'bıl; 2 ą"to-mo-bil' or -mō'bil, n. A self-propelling four-wheeled vehicle which travels on roadways or streets, the motor-power being usually steam, electricity, gasoline, alcohol, or naphtha. The power of the motor varies in ordinary cars, running from 4 to 60 H. P., while the specially constructed racing-cars reach higher than 300 H. P. See INTERNAL COMBUSTION; MOTOR CARS.— canoe automobile, a motor-car with canoe-like body, invented by M. Ravaillier, of Paris, in 1909, which can be propelled through water as well as driven on land by switching the driving power from the wheels to a propeller. It has been adopted by the French War Office.— mixed a., an automixte car. See AUTOMIXTE SYSTEM.— au"to-mo'bil-ing, n. The act of riding or driving in an automobile: used also attributively. — au"to-mo'bil-ism, n. The art, practise, or condition of using an automobile; also, the acts, methods, etc., of persons who use automobiles.— au"to-mo'bil-ist, n. 1. The owner or driver of an automobile. 2. One who habitually rides in an automobile. au'to-ist† [Colloq.].

PARTIAL LIST OF TERMS RELATING TO THE AUTOMOBILE

au-tom'o-lite, 1 ę-tom'o-lait; 2 ą-tŏm'o-lit, n. Mineral. A variety of gahnite.

au"to-mor-phic, a. 1. Modeled after oneself. 2. Petrol. Same as IDIOMORPHIC. au"to-mor'phous‡.—au"to-mor'phi-cal-ly, adv.—au"to-mor'phism, n. 1. The conception or characterization of another after the pattern of oneself. 2. Math. The property of being unaffected by substitution of any group of linear transformations.

au"to-mo'tiv(es, a. Self-propelled.

au'to-mo"tor, 1 ô'to-mō'tar or -tor; 2 ą'to-mō'tor, n. A self-propelled machine, as an automobile. [< AUTO- + MOTOR.]

au"to-my"so-pho'bi-a, n. A morbid dread of soiling one's person or clothing.—au"to-no-et'ic, a. Self-perceiving. [M.]

au"to-nom'a-sy, 1 ô'to-nem'a-si; 2 ą'to-nŏm'a-sy, n. Antonomasia: probably a misspelling.

au"to-nom'ic, 1 ô'to-nem'ik; 2 ą'to-nŏm'ic. a. 1. Having autonomy; self-governing; independent: opposed to heteronomic.

Man is autonomic. C. HODGE Syst. Theol. vol. ii, p. 182. [s. 1874.]

2. Bot. Produced by inherent causes, as certain spontaneous movements of plants. au"to-no-mat'ic‡; au"to-nom'i-cal‡.—au"to-nom'i-cal-ly, adv.

au-ton'o-mism, 1 ę-ton'o-mizm; 2 ą-tŏn'o-mism, n. 1. The principle of autonomy or the self-government of communities. 2. The theory that some interior agency shapes the outward form taken by plants or animals.—au-ton"o-mis'tic, a.

au-ton'o-mist, 1 ę-ton'o-mist; 2 ą-tŏn'o-mist, n. One who supports the political principle of autonomy, national or local.

au-ton'o-mize, 1 ę-ton'o-maiz; 2 ą-tŏn'o-miz, tt. [-MIZED; -MIZ'ING.] To make autonomous. [M.]

au-ton'o-mous, 1 ę-ton'o-mus; 2 ą-tŏn'o-mŭs, a. 1. Pertaining to or characterized by autonomy; self-ruling.

Bulgaria proper was made an autonomous principality, paying tribute to the Porte. The Chautauquan Apr., 1890, p. 39.

2. Biol. Independent of any other organism; autonomic. [< Gr. autonomos, < autos, self, + nemō, distribute.]—au-ton'o-mous-ly, adv.

au-ton'o-my, 1 ę-ton'o-mi; 2 ą-tŏn'o-my, n. [-MIES, 1 -miz; 2 -mis, pl.] 1. The power, right, or condition of self-government; independence; as, the autonomy of an individual.

The country must have what the Greeks called autonomy. F. LIEBER On Civil Liberty, p. 56. [c. 1877.]

2. A community that governs itself. 3. Philos. (1) Ethical self-determination of the will; the power of self-control, independent of external influences; often, also, as uncompelled by motives. (2) Kantianism. The doctrine that the principle of morality which obligates the will is independent of the character and conditions of the objects willed.

Autonomy of the will is that property o. it by which it is a law to itself (independently on any objects of volition). KANT tr. in Abbott's Kant's Theory of Ethics pt. 1, sec. 2, p. 85. [c. a. & co. 1873.]

4. Biol. The condition of an organ or part governed by its own special laws; organic independence.

au'to-nym, n. 1. One's own name, as distinguished from a pseudonym; also, a work published under the author's real name. 2. Ethnol. A people's name for themselves: opposed to ecthronym. 3. [Rare.] A homonym.—au"to-path'ic, a. Pathol. Arising from the structure, disposition, etc., of the patient, as certain chronic diseases.—au-top'a-thy, n. 1. [Rare.] Feeling for self alone: the opposite of sympathy. 2. A malady produced by an unknown cause.

au"to-pe-lag'ic, 1 ę-to-pi-laj'ik; 2 ą-to-pe-laġ'ic, a. Biol. Of or belonging to, or found near, the surface of the sea: applied strictly to the fauna or flora. [< AUTO- + Gr. pelagos, sea.]

au"to-pep'sia, n. Pathol. Same as AUTODIGESTION.—Au-toph'a-gi, n. pl. Ornith. A section of birds whose young are able to run about immediately after hatching; Precoces; opposed to Heterophagi. Au-toph'a-gous, a. 1. Able to feed themselves directly after hatching, as the young of certain birds; self-feeding; of or pertaining to the Autophagi. 2. Feeding upon oneself.—au-toph'a-gy, n.—au"to-pho"by, n. 1. [Rare.] Self-fear; morbid shrinking from self-mention. 2. Abnormal fear of seclusion.—au'to-phon, n. A musical instrument in which the airs are determined by perforations in a ribbon or sheet corresponding to the notes. au'to-phone‡.—au-toph'o-ny, n. Med. 1. The increased resonance of one's own voice, of breath-sounds, or of circulatory sounds during disease of the nasal pharynx or the middle ear. 2. The sound of one's own voice while speaking with the ear close to the chest of a patient. au"to-pho'ni-a‡.—aut"oph-thal'mo-scope, n. Optics. An instrument by means of which one may inspect the interior of his own eyes.—au-to'phy-a, n. The skeletal elements of a sponge secreted by itself: contrasted with -enophya.—au"to-phyl-log'e-ny, n. Bot. The abnormal production of one leaf upon another.—au'to-phyte, n. A plant not requiring organized material for its nutrition, as is the case with saprophytes and parasites.—au'to-pis-ty, n. [Rare.] The state or quality of being credible on self-evidence or believable on internal grounds.—au"to-pla'gi-a-rism, n. The act of quoting, as from one's own writings, without giving credit to the source.—au'to-plast, n. 1. One of the cells of independent origin, formed in the residual yolk and afterward forming the yolk-membrane, in the embryology of the cephalopods. 2. Bot. A chloroplastid; granule of chlorophyl.—au'to-plas"ty, n. Surg. The operation of repairing wounds or diseased parts by means of living tissue from other parts of the same body.—au"to-plas'tic, a.

au-top'sic, 1 ę-top'sik; 2 ą-tŏp'sic, a. Pathol. 1. Of, pertaining to, or derived from an autopsy. 2‡. Autoptic. au-top'si-cal‡.—au-top'si-cal-ly, adv.

au-top'so-rin, 1 ę-top'so-rin; 2 ą-tŏp'so-rin, n. The virus of a patient homeopathically administered to himself, as in itch, etc.

au'top-sy, 1 ô'tep-si; 2 ą'tŏp-sy, n. [-SIES, 1 -siz; 2 -sis, pl.] 1. Anat. & Pathol. The examination of a dead body by dissection to ascertain the cause of death, the seat of disease, etc.; post-mortem examination. 2. Hence, figuratively, critical dissection; as, the autopsy of a poem. 3. The act of seeing with one's own eyes; personal ocular inspection or examination.

In those [birds] that have forked tails, autopsy convinceth us that it [the tail] hath this use [to turn the body to the right or left.] RAY On Creation. [R. Dict.] [< Gr. autopsia, < autos, self, + optos, seen: see OPTIC.] au-top'si-a‡.

au"to-psy'chi-cal, a. Revealing one's inner self.

au-top'tic, 1 ę-top'tik; 2 ą-tŏp'tic, a. Seen with one's own eyes, or based on such inspection; of, or of the nature of, an eye-witness. [< Gr. autoptikos, < autos, self; and see OPTIC.] au'top-sic‡; au-top'ti-cal‡.—au-top'ti-cal-ly, adv.—au"top-tic'i-ty, n. The state or quality of being autoptic. [ç = c.]

au"to-quad"ri-cy'cle, 1 ô'to-kwed'ri-sai'kl; 2 ą'to-kwąd'ri-au'tor‡, au-to'ri-al‡, au-tor'i-ty‡. See AUTHOR, etc.

au"to-re-duc'tion, n. The reduction of silver, of mercury, or other easily reducible metals to their metallic state, by heating their cyanides in a sealed tube with water.—au"to-sche'di-asm, n. Something done impromptu.—au"to-sche'di-as'tic, -ti-cal, a.—au"to-sche'di-as'ti-cal-ly, adv.—au"to-sche'di-aze, tt. To act impromptu; improvise.—au'to-scope, n. 1. An instrument for the examination of one's own eye or other organ. 2. Psychol. Any instrument by means of which subconscious ideas are evoked.—au"to-scop'ic, a.—au-tos'co-py, n.—au'to-sight, n. Mil. A self-acting sight.—au"to-si-ta'ri-us, n. [-i, pl.) Terat. Either one of the twin bodies of a monstrosity consisting of two equal autosites.—au'to-site, n. 1. Any living organism upon which another lives as a parasite; especially, that body of a double-bodied monster which supplies nutriment to the other. 2. A monstrosity capable of independent existence from birth.—au"to-sit'ic, a.—au'to-some, n. Genetics. Any chromosome other than the sex-chromosomes.—au"to-spray', n. A small tubular glass with a narrow neck, having at each end a perforated metallic tube through which a spray is ejected by shaking the glass.—au'to-stage, n. A motor-omnibus.—au'to-start"er, n. A compensator or autotransformer used to start motor-engines.

au"to-sty'lic, 1 ô'to-stai'lik; 2 ą'to-stŷ'lic, a. Having the jaws suspended directly from the cranium without the intervention of the hyoidean arch, as in all vertebrates above fishes, and in chimæroids and dipnoans. [< Gr. autostylos, on natural columns, < autos, self, + stylos, column.]

au"to-sug-gest"i-bil'i-ty, 1 ô'to-sug-jest'i-bil'i-ti; 2 ą'to-sŭg-ġest'i-bil'i-ty, n. Pathol. 1. The state or quality of being autosuggestive. 2. Ability to hypnotize oneself.

au"to-sug-ges'tion, 1 ô'to-sug-jes'chan; 2 ą'to-sŭg-ġes'chon, n. Pathol. Suggestion, particularly with a view to produce a condition of autohypnosis, emanating from self only.

au"to-sug-ges'tiv(es, 1 ô'to-sug-jes'tiv; 2 ą'to-sŭg-ġes'tiv, a. 1. Fitted or tending to stimulate thought of itself. 2. Pertaining to or characteristic of autosuggestion.

au'to-tel"e-graph, n. Same as TELAUTOGRAPH.

au"to-tel'ic, a. Philos. For its own end or sake, as in "art for art's sake": opposed to heterotelic: terms suggested by Baldwin.—au"to-tem'nous, a. Biol. Dividing or capable of dividing spontaneously, as tissue-cells, etc. au"to-tem'nic‡.—au"to-tem'non, n.—au'to-the"ism, n. 1. Theol. The doctrine of the self-existence of Deity, especially of the Christ. 2. Deification of oneself; self-worship; self-esteem; vanity.—au'to-the"ist, n.—au-tot'o-mize, tt. [-MIZED; -MIZ'ING.] To practise autotomy; throw off or cast an organ, as some animals when handled or disturbed.—au-tot'o-my, n. Self-cleavage; in biology, spontaneous cell-division; also, the protective shedding of a part or organ.—au"to-tom'ic, au-tot'o-mous, a.—au"to-tox-e'mi-a, n. The poisoning of self from noxious secretions of one's own body: auto-toxication. au"to-tox-æ'mi-a‡; au"to-tox"i-co'sis‡; au"to-tox'is‡.

au"to-tox'ic, 1 ô'to-teks'ik; 2 ą'to-tŏks'ic, a. Self-poisoning. [< AUTO- + TOXIC.]—au"to-tox"i-ca'tion, n. The poisoning of the body, or of some part of the body, by toxic matter generated therein.

au'to-tox"in, 1 ô'to-teks'in; 2 ą'to-tŏ s'in, n. Any toxin produced by metamorphotic changes of tissue within an organism.

au"to-trans-form'er, 1 ô'to-trans-fôrm'ar; 2 ą'to-trănsfôrm'er, n. Elec. An automatic compensator used with alternating-current motors, in which the motor is fed from different points in an impedance-coil placed across the supply-circuits.

au"to-trans-fu'sion, 1 ô'to-tranz-fiū'zan; 2 ą'to-trănsfū'zhon, n. The forcing of blood from the extremities toward the internal organs by bandaging or elevating the limbs.—au"to-troph'ic, a. Biol. Self-nourishing: said of green plants that make their own food by photosynthesis: opposed to heterotrophic.—au-tot'ro-phy, n. Bot. The regular or normal mode of obtaining nourishment; the absorption of nourishment through true root-hairs: contrasted with heterotrophy.—au-tot'ro-pism, n. Plant Physiol. The tendency of the organs of a plant, when not influenced from without, to grow in straight lines.—au"to-trop'ic, a.

au'to-truck, 1 ô'to-truk; 2 ą'to-trŭk, n. A self-propelling vehicle used for transporting heavy merchandise, freight, etc. [< AUTO- + TRUCK², n.] au'to-type, 1 ô'to-taip; 2 ą'to-tŷp, tt. [-TYPED; -TYP'ING.] To produce in facsimile by means of the autotype process.

au'to-type, n. 1. A photographic process by which pictures are produced in monochrome in a carbon pigment; also, a print so produced. 2. A facsimile. 3‡. Same as HEAUTOTYPE. [< AUTO- + TYPE.]—au"to-typ'ic, a. Having relation to an autotype; produced by or pertaining to autotypy.—au-tot'y-py, n. Reproduction by the autotype process.

au"to-ty-pog'ra-phy, 1 ô'to-ti-pog'ra-fi; 2 ą'to-ty-pŏġ'ra-fy, n. Print. The art or process of drawing on gelatin, with a special ink, relief designs which are then transferred by pressure to soft metal plates from which copies may be printed. See ZINCOGRAPHY. [< AUTO- + TYPOGRAPHY.]

au-tox'i-da"tor, n. Chem. A substance that may be autoxidized.—au-tox'i-dize, tt. & ri. To oxidize by combining directly with the oxygen of the air at normal temperatures.—au-tox'i-da'tion, n.—au-tox"i-diz'a-bl(er, a.—au"to-zo'old, n. Zooph. A completely developed zooid, as among the alcyonarians.

au"tre-fois', 1 ô'tra-fwā'; 2 ô'tre-fwā', adv. [F.] Law. Formerly; at another time; as, autrefois acquit (formerly acquitted), used as a plea in bar of a second prosecution for the same offense. au"ter-fois'‡; au"ter-folts'‡; au"tre-folts'‡. [county, Ga.

Au-trey'ville, 1 ô-trē'vil; 2 ô-tre'vil, n. A town in Colquitt au'tumn, 1 ô'tum; 2 ą'tŭm, n. 1. The third season of au'tums, the year, between summer and winter: often called fall. Autumn is more common in England, and fall in the United States.

Astronomically, autumn begins about September 22 and ends about December 21. Popularly, it comprises, in North America, September, October, and November; in Great Britain, August, September, and October. In the countries south of the equator autumn corresponds to the spring of the northern hemisphere.

There is a harmony In Autumn, and a lustre in its sky. SHELLEY Hymn to Intellectual Beauty st. 7.

2. The period of ripeness, maturity, or incipient decay; also, the results or fruits of autumn.

The host was already passed into the autumn of his years. BULWER-LYTTON Last Days of Pompeii bk. ii, p. 51. [P. & r c.]

—au'tumn-bells", n An autumn-flowering European gentian (Gentiana pneumonanthe) with bell-shaped flowers.—a. crocus, the meadow-saffron (Colchicum autumnale), a European plant of the lily family.—a. wood, see FALL WOOD.—au-tum'ni-ty, n. [Rare.] The quality or condition of being autumnal.

au-tum'nal, 1 ę-tum'nal; 2 ą-tŭm'nal, a. Of or pertaining to autumn; produced or maturing in autumn; characteristic of or like autumn; hence, growing old; declining; fading; as, autumnal fruits; the autumnal years of life. au-tum'ni-an‡.

No Spring, nor Summer's beauty, hath such grace, As I have seen in one autumnal face. JOHN DONNE The Autumnal l. 1.

The avaricious tradesman who charges too high a rate of profit, loses his customers, and so is checked in his greediness.
SPENCER Education ch. 3, p. 176. [A. 1861.]

Syn.: close, covetous, greedy, miserly, niggardly, parsimonious, penurious, rapacious, sordid, stingy. Avaricious and covetous refer especially to acquisition; miserly, niggardly, parsimonious, and penurious to expenditure. The avaricious man desires both to get and to keep, the covetous man to get something away from its possessor, tho one may be made avaricious by the pressure of great expenditures. Miserly and niggardly persons seek to gain by mean and petty savings; the miserly by stinting themselves, the niggardly by stinting others. Parsimonious and penurious may apply to one's outlay either for himself or for others; in the latter use, they are somewhat less harsh and reproachful terms than niggardly. The close man holds like a vise all that he gets. Near and nigh are provincial words of similar import. The rapacious have the robber instinct, and put it in practise in some form, as far as they dare. The avaricious and rapacious are ready to reach out for gain; the parsimonious, miserly, and niggardly prefer the safer and less adventurous way of avoiding expenditure. Greedy and stingy are used not only of money, but often of other things, as food, etc. The greedy child wishes to enjoy everything himself; the stingy child, to keep others from getting it.— Ant.: bountiful, free, generous, liberal, munificent, prodigal, wasteful.— Prep.: avaricious of power.— av"a-ri'cious-ly, adv.— av"a-ri'cious-ness, n.

2. [a-] A welcoming hail; a farewell salutation. [L., imper. of aveo, hail.] — Ave Maria, 1 ā'vē ma-rī'ə; 2 ä'va ma-rī'ä, or Ave Mary. 1. R. C. Ch. Literally, Hail Mary; a prayer to the Virgin Mary in very frequent and universal use, finding a place in the divine office but not in the liturgy.

It is commonly described as consisting of three parts. The first, 'Hail (Mary), full of grace, the Lord is with thee, blessed art thou amongst women,' embodies the words used by the Angel Gabriel in saluting the Blessed Virgin (Luke i, 28). The second, 'and blessed is the fruit of thy womb (Jesus),' is borrowed from the Divinely inspired greeting of St. Elizabeth (Luke i, 42). . . . Finally, the petition, 'Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us sinners now and at the hour of our death, Amen,' is stated by the official 'Catechism of the Council of Trent' to have been framed by the Church itself. The official recognition of the Ave Maria in its complete form . . . was finally given in the Roman Breviary of 1568. Catholic Encyc. vol. vii, pp. 110, 112.

2. The time when the Ave Maria is to be said, marked by the ringing of the Ave bell. Compare ANGELUS. 3. The small beads on a rosary, used to number the Aves repeated.

Syn.: punish, retaliate, revenge, vindicate, visit. Avenge and revenge, once close synonyms, are now far apart in meaning. To avenge is to visit some offense with punishment, in order to vindicate the righteous, or to uphold and illustrate the right by the suffering or destruction of the wicked. "And seeing one of them suffer wrong, he avenged him that was oppressed, and smote the Egyptian," Acts vii, 24. To revenge is to inflict harm or suffering upon another through personal anger and resentment at something done to ourselves. Avenge is unselfish; revenge is selfish. Revenge, according to present usage, could not be said of God. To retaliate may be necessary for self-defense, without the idea of revenge.— Prep.: avenge on or upon (rarely, avenge oneself of) a wrong-doer.— avenging angel, same as DESTROYING ANGEL. See under ANGEL.— a-venge', n. [Archaic.] Execution of vengeance; retaliation.— a-venge'ful, a. Vengeful.— a-venge'ment†, n. The act of avenging; vengeance.— a-veng'ing-ly, adv. So as to avenge.

Av"i-cen'nism, 1 av'ı-sen'izm; 2 ăv'ĭ-çĕn'ĭsm, n. Aristotelianism as taught by Avicenna, whose chief tenets were: (1) All created things are possible in themselves, but only become necessary by the act of the Creator. (2) The soul of man has two faces, one turned toward the body, which forms the practical understanding; the other, receptive to external forms, which it reproduces in due order. As to theology, Avicenna argues for the existence of God from the necessity of a First Cause, and maintains the immortality of the soul. He also brings forward arguments for the necessity of revelation, which he asserts is to be found in Islam. It is chiefly to his Canon of Medicine that he owes his fame, for it was the guide to medical study in every university in Europe from the 12th to the 17th century.

2. Law. To acknowledge and justify.

The distrainor, who is now the defendant, makes AVOWRY; that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right, or the right of his wife. BLACKSTONE Commentaries vol. ii, p. 149.

3†. To confess obligation or relation to; approve.

II. i. Law. To acknowledge and justify an act done, as the taking of goods, or a distress for rent. [< F. avouer, < à (< L. ad), to, + vouer; see VOW, v.]

Syn.: acknowledge, admit, aver, avouch, confess, declare, own, profess. Acknowledge, admit, and declare refer either to oneself or to others; all the other words refer only to one's own knowledge or action. A man acknowledges another's claim or his own promise; he admits an opponent's advantage or his own error; he declares either what he has seen or experienced or what he has received from another; he avers what he is sure of from his own knowledge or consciousness; he gives his assurance as the voucher for what he avouches; he avows openly a belief or intention that he has silently held, yet there is always the suggestion that some will be ready to challenge or censure what one avows; as, the clergyman avowed his dissent from the doctrine of his church. Avow and avouch take a direct object; aver is followed by a conjunction: a man avows his faith, avouches a deed, avers that he was present. Avow has usually a good sense; what a person avows he at least does not treat as blameworthy, criminal, or shameful; if he did, he would be said to confess. Own applies to all things, good or bad, great or small, which one takes as his own. See ACKNOWLEDGE; ASSERT; CONFESS.— Ant.: contradict, deny, disavow, disclaim, disown, ignore, repudiate.

HOMER Iliad tr. by Pope, bk. xxiv, l. 583.
4. [Colloq.] Very bad, great, or the like; horrid; frightful; monstrous; as, an awful fool. [< aw- (AWE) + -ful (FULL).] awe'ful†; aw'fu'† [Scot.].
Syn.: alarming, appalling, dire, direful, dread, dreadful, fearful, frightful, horrible, horrific, portentous, shocking, solemn, terrible, terrific. Awful should not be used of things which are merely disagreeable or annoying, nor of all that are alarming and terrible, but only of such as bring a solemn awe upon the soul, as in the presence of a superior power; as, the awful hush before the battle. We speak of an exalted station, a grand mountain, an imposing presence, a majestic cathedral, a noble mien, a solemn litany, a stately march, an august assembly, the awful scene of the judgment day. Compare synonyms for ALARM; AMAZEMENT; AUGUST; FRIGHTFUL.— Ant.: alluring, beautiful, cheerful, delightful, easy, gentle, harmless, innocent, pleasant, pleasing, rapturous, serene, sweet, transporting.
— aw'ful-ly, adv. 1. In an awful manner; terribly; sublimely; solemnly; reverentially. 2. [Colloq.] Excessively; very; as, awfully rich.— aw'ful-ness, n.

FISKE American Revolution vol. ii, p. 54. [H. M. & CO. 1891.]
2. Not dexterous or skilful in action; clumsy; bungling; inefficient; as, an awkward workman. 3. Ill-adapted for use or for the purpose intended; unhandy; as, an awkward tool. 4. Embarrassing or embarrassed; unpleasant; uneasy; also, not easily dealt with, or dangerous to deal with; as, an awkward predicament; an awkward feeling; an awkward customer. 5†. Directed or turned the wrong way; also, perverse; untoward. [< awk (< Icc. öfug, afug, back foremost, < af, away) + -WARD.] ack'ward‡; auk'ward†.
Syn.: boorish, bungling, clownish, clumsy, gawky, maladroit, rough, uncouth, unhandy, unskilful. Awkward, from awk (kindred with off, from the Norwegian), is afward, turned the wrong way; it was anciently used of a back-handed or left-handed blow in battle, of squinting eyes, etc. Clumsy, on the other hand (from clumse, also through the Norwegian), signifies benumbed, stiffened with cold; this is the original meaning of clumsy fingers, clumsy limbs. Thus, awkward primarily refers to action, clumsy to condition. A tool, a vehicle, or the human frame may be clumsy in shape or build, awkward in motion. The clumsy man is almost of necessity awkward, but the awkward man may not be naturally clumsy. The finest untrained colt is awkward; a horse that is clumsy in build can never be trained out of awkwardness. An awkward statement has an uncomfortable, and perhaps recoiling force; a statement that contains ill-assorted and incongruous material in ill-chosen language is clumsy. We speak of an awkward predicament, an awkward scrape. An awkward excuse commonly reflects on the one who offers it. We say the admitted facts have an awkward appearance. In none of these cases could clumsy be used. Clumsy is, however, applied to movements that seem as unsuitable as those of benumbed and stiffened limbs. A dancing bear is both clumsy and awkward.— Ant.: adroit, clever, dexterous, handy, skilful.— Prep.: awkward in action; at the business.
— awkward squad (Mil.), a small body of untrained recruits assembled for drill.— awk'ward-ish, a.— awk'ward-ly, adv.— awk'ward-ness, n.
A. W. L., abbr. Absent with leave.
awl, 1 ôl; 2 ąl, n. 1. A slender tool for making small holes in leather, wood, or the like, without removing material. Awls are named mainly from their use; as, belt-awl (short, strong, sharp-pointed, for piercing belting), brad-awl (short, non-tapering, with cutting edge on the end, for making holes in wood, as for receiving brads, screws, etc.), carpet-awl (a blade about 4 inches long tapering to a point, for piercing carpets), drawing-awl (having an eye for the reception of thread), lasting-awl (a sewing-awl used by a boot-closer), marking-awl (see SCRIBING-AWL), packing-awl (for passing twine through packing-cloth or hamper-meshes), pegging-awl, peg-awl (short chisel-edged, for making holes in shoe-soles for the insertion of pegs), probing-awl (to kill fish by piercing the brain), scribing-awl, scribe-awl, scratch-awl (stiff, straight, sharp-pointed, with which to make lines on wood, metal, etc.), sewing-awl (for piercing holes for purpose of sewing), stabbing-awl (straight, sharp-pointed, for piercing leather, etc.), upholsterers' or cane-seating awl (a straight, sharp-pointed awl, blade about 3½ inches long, used by upholsterers and cane-workers).

ax[1], 1 aks; 2 ăks, vt. & vi. To ask: formerly a correct and much-used form, but now unused except as a provincial form or by the uneducated.
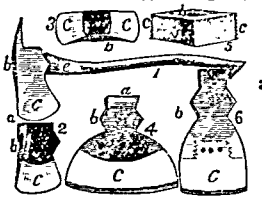
ax[2],) vt. 1. To furnish with an ax or axes; as, the axe,) axed fasces of the Roman lictors. 2. To cut, work, dress, or fashion with an ax. ax,) n. [AX'ES, pl.] 1. An edge-tool consisting of an axe,) iron head (or poll) commonly with a blunt back and a broad, slightly convex steel cutting edge, fitted by means of a socket with a handle (or helve): used for chopping, hewing, cleaving, felling, or the like. In trade use an ax may be either the implement ready for use, including the helve, or the head alone. Axes vary much in shape and size as well as in intended use, the broadax for hewing timber and some old battle-axes being characterized by blades much broader than the bit of the ordinary chopping-ax. Some axes are named (1) from their use; as, chipping-ax or listing-ax, dock-ax (a form of poleax used by dock-laborers and others), felling-ax, fire-ax (for use by firemen and others in cases of fire), grubbing-ax, holing-ax (for cutting mortises), logging-ax, lopping-ax, peel- or peeling-ax (double-headed); or (2) from the thing upon which they are used: as, flesh-ax, granite-ax, head-ax (for cutting a whale's head), ice-ax, slate-ax (slate-cutters' hammer with pointed head; sax).



Axes.
1. Firemen's ax. 2. Common ax. 3. Double-bitted ax. 4. Broadax. 5. Stone-cutters' ax. 6. Ship broadax, showing method of attaching steel blade to malleable iron or cast-steel head. a, head or poll; b, eye; c, bit or blade; e, helve or handle.

2. Stone-working. An ax-hammer. [< AS. eaxt, æx; cp. Goth. aqizi, OHG. acchus, ax.] — an ax to grind (Colloq., U. S.), a private end to subserve or promote: probably first used by Benjamin Franklin, in an article entitled "Too Much for Your Whistle."— ax'-form", a. Ax-shaped.— ax-hammer, n. A stone-cutters' tool made with two opposite cutting edges, and used for producing on stone a form of finish known as "axed" or "ax-hammered."— ax-hammered, a.— bull-head ax, an ax with a hammer-like projection back of the eye: used in slaughter-houses for felling cattle.— double ax (Archeol.), a two-bladed ax, used often in hieroglyphics as a symbol of Zeus, especially by the Hittites, ancient Cypriotes, and Mycenæans. It was called labrys in Caria.— grooved ax (Archeol.), a Neolithic ax with grooves instead of an eye for hafting.— Jedwood ax, a battle-ax used by mounted men.— Lochaber ax, a Scottish modification of the English bill.— to put the ax on the helve, to overcome a difficulty.

Primitive Axes.
a, Paleolithic chipped stone ax; b, Neolithic grooved ax of polished stone. c, Pueblo stone ax from Homolobi.

ax'al, 1 aks'əl; 2 ăks'al, a. Axial.

ax"an-thop'si-a, 1 aks"an-thop'sı-ə; 2 ăks"ăn-thŏp'si-a, n. Color-blindness in which there is insensibility to yellow.

ax"-break'er, 1 aks"-brēk'-ər; 2 ăks'-brāk'er, n. Bot. An Australian and Tasmanian ironwood-tree (Notelæa longifolia). Compare IRONWOOD and NOTELÆA. axe"-break'er†.

Ax'el Hei'berg Land, 1 aks'el hī'berg; 2 ăks'ĕl hī'bĕrg. A large Arctic island, 90° W. long., 77° to 82° N. lat.: named for a Norwegian merchant by Sverdrup.

ax'i-al, 1 aks'ı-əl; 2 ăks'i-al, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or constituting an axis or central line; rotating on or about an axis; forming the axis, as of a mountain range; as, an axial organ; an axial rotation.

The time of axial rotation which determines the length of the day varies with different planets.
H. W. WARREN Recreations in Astron. p. 101. [H. 1879.]

2. Anat. Of or pertaining to the head and trunk; as, the axial skeleton.— axial canal, a sponge-spicule in the cavity of which lies the nucleus of organic matter which gathers about it the mineral substance deposited.— a. cell (Cytol.), the single parent cell, in the Dicyemida, from which spring the germ-cells.— a. cord (Zooph.), in Crinoidea: (1) A nerve having its origin in the dorsal nervous system, which lies in a channel in the floor of the main brachial groove, and supplies branches to the arm-muscles and sensory terminals of the ectoderm. (2) The thickening of the endothelium in the cœloma which forms the gonads.— a. group (Math.), a group consisting of three 180° rotations about mutually perpendicular axes and of the identical operation. — a. line, the line of magnetism between the two poles of a U magnet.— a. plane. 1. A plane that passes through the axis of a fold and divides the latter as nearly as possible into structurally symmetrical halves. 2. A plane defined by two axes of a crystal, especially by the two secondary optic axes of a biaxial crystal. See AXIS.— a. sinus, the vascular cavity enclosing the ovoid gland in echinoderms. — a. thread, in the sponge, a fine thread of organic material which runs through the axis of each spicule and its primary branches.— ax"i-al'i-ty, n.— ax'i-al-ly, adv. With regard to or in the direction of an axis.

ax-if'er-ous, 1 aks-if'ər-us; 2 ăks-if'er-ŭs, a. Bot. Bearing or consisting of an axis, without leaves or other appendages. [< L. axis, axis, + fero, bear.]

ax'i-form, 1 aks'ı-fōrm; 2 ăks'i-fôrm, a. Like or having the form of an axis. [< L. axis, axis, + forma, form.]

ax-if'u-gal, 1 aks-if'yu-gal; 2 ăks-if'yu-ğal, a. Centrifugal. [< L. axis, axis, + fugio, flee.]

Ax-i'i-dæ, 1 aks-aı'ı-dī; 2 ăks-i'i-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of trichobranchiate macrurans having reduced pleurobranchiæ and podobranchiæ with only filamentous processes to branchiæ. Ax'i-us, n. (t. g.) [< L. axis, axis.] — ax'i-id, a. & n.— ax'i-oid, a.

ax'il, 1 aks'ıl; 2 ăks'il, n. 1. Bot. The cavity or angle formed by the junction of the upper side of a leaf-stalk, branch, or other lateral member with a stem or branch, or the point at or just above such junction.

A single leaf falls—the bud at its axil will shoot forth many leaves. H. W. BEECHER Star Papers pt. ii, p. 185. [J. C. D. 1855.]

2. Anat. The axilla. [< L. axilla, dim. of axis, axis.]

ax'il, 1 aks'ıl; 2 ăks'il, a. Of, pertaining to, or situated in or in the line of an axis or the axis; axial. [< L. axis, axis.]

ax"i-lem'ma, 1 aks"ı-lem'ə; 2 ăks"i-lĕm'a, n. Anat. A protective sheath enveloping the axis-cylinder of a nerve-fiber. Compare MEDULLARY SHEATH, under MEDULLARY. [< L. axis, axis, + Gr. lemma, peel.]

ax-il'la, 1 aks-il'ə; 2 ăks-il'a, n. [-LÆ, 1 -ī; 2 -ē, pl.] 1. Anat. The hollow space beneath the junction of the arm and shoulder; armpit. See illus. in next column. 2. Bot. An axil. [L.; see AXIL.]

ax-il'lant, 1 aks-il'ənt; 2 ăks-il'ant, a. Bot. Subtending or forming an axil; as, an axillant leaf.

ax'il-lar, 1 aks'ı-lər; 2 ăks'i-lar. I. a. Axillary. II. n. Ornith. One of the relatively long, stiff feathers on the under surface of the wing at its junction with the body: commonly in the plural.

ax'il-la-ry, 1 aks'ı-lē-rı; 2 ăks'i-lă-ry. I. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or situated in an axil or axilla; as, the axillary artery, gland, or vein; axillary buds. 2. Zool. Attached to a joint. II. n. [-RIES, 1 -rız; 2 -rig, pl.] Ornith. An axillar.— axillary line, one of the lines descending in a vertical direction from the axilla, as the anterior axillary line (from its anterior fold), midaxillary line (from its center), posterior axillary line (from its posterior fold).

Anatomy of Human Axilla.
AA, axillary artery; AV, axillary vein; BP, brachial plexus; PMa, pectoralis major; PMi, pectoralis minor.

ax'in, 1 aks'ın; 2 ăks'in, n. The fat of the Mexican cochineal (Coccus axinus), consisting of the glycerids of lauric and axinic acids: used in medicine and as a varnish. a'ge†.— ax-in'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing axin.— axinic acid, a brown oily compound ($C_{18}H_{32}O_2$) derived from the saponified axin.

ax'ine, 1 aks'ın or -ain; 2 ăks'in or -in. I. a. Of or pertaining to a group of deer including the axis. II. n. An axine deer.

Ax"i-nel'i-dæ, 1 aks"ı-nel'ı-dī; 2 ăks"i-nĕl'i-dē, n. A family of halichondrine sponges characterized by non-reticulate skeletons, and the spicules of the skeleton-fibers projecting at an acute angle to the axis so as to present a feathery appearance. Ax"i-nel'la, n. (t. g.) — ax"i-nel'lid, a. & n.

ax-in'i-form, 1 aks-in'ı-fōrm; 2 ăks-in'i-fôrm, a. Ax-shaped. [< Gr. axinē, ax, + -FORM.]

ax'in-ite, 1 aks'ın-ait; 2 ăks'in-it, n. Mineral. A usually plum-brown or cinnamon-brown transparent to translucent aluminum-calcium borosilicate, with varying amounts of iron and manganese, crystallizing in the triclinic system: sometimes used as a gem. [< Gr. axinē, ax.]

ax'i-no-man"cy, 1 aks'ı-no-man"sı; 2 ăks'i-no-măn"çy, n. Divination by means of an ax. [< L. axinomantia, < Gr. axinē, ax, + manteia: see -MANCY.] [AXONOMETRY.

ax"i-nom'e-try, 1 aks"ı-nem'ı-trı; 2 ăks"i-nŏm'e-try, n. See ax'i-o-lite, 1 aks'ı-o-lait; 2 ăks'i-o-lit, n. Petrol. An aggregation of minute acicular crystals which exhibits fibrous structure at right angles to a median line, as in certain glassy rhyolites; elongated spherulites. [< L. axis, axis, + -LITE.] — ax"i-o-lit'ic, a.

ax'i-om, 1 aks'ı-əm; 2 ăks'i-om, n. 1. Math. & Logic. A proposition agreed upon as the basis of an argument or demonstration; especially, a self-evident or necessary truth; a proposition or principle that needs no demonstration in order to be accepted, as the statement that a whole is greater than any of its parts.

The philosophical proof of the existence of God depends upon the validity of the axiom that every effect must have a cause.
H. WINSLOW Christian Doctrines p. 13. [C. D. 1844.]

2. Any proposition or principle that men universally receive and act on as if it were a necessary truth.

It is almost an axiom that those who do most for the heathen abroad are most liberal for the heathen at home.
LIVINGSTONE Last Journals p. 443. [H. 1875.]

It has become one of the axioms of reform, that God works with minorities. AUSTIN PHELPS My Note-Book p. 38. [S. 1881.]

3. A law or rule drawn from experience by induction or generalization: so used by positivists.

It remains to inquire what is the ground of our belief in axioms — what is the evidence on which they rest? I answer, they are experimental truths, generalizations from observation.
MILL Logic p. 152. [H. 1856.]

4. Kantian. A synthetical proposition or judgment, which is of a priori origin and therefore entirely independent of experience, but which gives the law to all our intuitions of extensive magnitudes. 5†. Logic. A proposition for consideration. [< F. axiome, < L. axioma, < Gr. axiōma, < agō, lead, weigh.]

Syn.: truism. Both the axiom and the truism are instantly seen to be true, and need no proof; but in an axiom there is progress of thought, while the truism simply says the same thing over again. The axiom that "things which are equal to the same thing are equal to one another" unfolds in the latter part of the sentence the truth implied in the first part, which might have been overlooked if not stated. In the truism that "a man can do all he is capable of," the former and the latter part of the sentence are simply identical, and the mind is left just where it started. Hence the axiom is valuable and useful, while the truism is weak and flat, unless the form of statement makes it striking or racy, as in "all fools are out of their wits." See ADAGE. — Ant.: absurdity, contradiction, demonstration, nonsense, paradox, sophism.

— axioms of continuity. Math. 1. The theory that, by the removal of a finite number of segments from any line, a definite point in that line may be reached or surpassed. axiom of Archimedes‡. 2. The theory that it is impossible to enlarge the existing system of elements without contravening all other axioms. a. of completeness‡.— middle a., a credible generalization from common experience which gives way to a scientific formulation.

ax"i-o-mat'ic, 1 aks"ı-o-mat'ık; 2 ăks"i-o-măt'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of an axiom; self-evident; as, an axiomatic truth. 2. Based upon, characterized by, or abounding in axioms; as, an axiomatic philosophy. [< Gr. axiōmatikos, < axiōma; see AXIOM.] ax"i-o-mat'i-cal†.— ax"i-o-mat'i-cal-ly, adv.

ax"i-om'e-ter, 1 aks"ı-em'ı-tər; 2 ăks"i-ŏm'e-ter, n. An index that shows the helmsman the position of the tiller. [< L. axis, axis, + -METER.]

ax'i-on, 1 aks'ı-en; 2 ăks'i-ŏn, n. Anat. The cerebrospinal axis, or central nervous system. [< AXIS.]

ax'i-o-pis"ty†, n. Trustworthiness; credibility.

ax"i-o-scot'ic, 1 aks"ı-o-skot'ık; 2 ăks"i-o-scŏt'ic, a. Phot. Correct in the rendering of colors; orthochromatic; isochromatic. [< Gr. axios, correct, + skotos, shadow.]

Axioscotic photography . . . has drawn a great deal of attention of late. A. BLACK in Century Magazine Sept., 1887, p. 727.

ax'is, 1 aks'ıs; 2 ăks'is, n. [-ES, 1 -ız; 2 -ēş, pl.] 1. A line on which something rotates, or around which something is symmetrically arranged; in mechanics and astronomy, the geometric line round which a turning body revolves; as, the axis of the earth.

The globe being now a perfect magnet, we are perhaps safe from any future change of its axis.
B. FRANKLIN Essays, Theory of the Earth p. 284. [L. & CO. 1851.]

2. Mech. The spindle or other support of a rotating body; axle. 3. Geom. (1) One of the principal lines through the center of a figure or solid, especially the longest or shortest, or a line as to which the figure or solid is symmetrical; as, the axis of a cylinder. (2) A fixed line along which distances are measured, or to which positions are referred; as, the axis of abscissas; axis of ordinates. See phrases. (3) Any line having the special property of indicating the relation of two or more figures. 4. Fine Arts. An imaginary line through the center of a drawing or sculpture for purposes of measurement or reference. 5. Figuratively, that on which any matter hinges or turns; pivotal point.

The secret of reform lies not in revolution, but in evolution — in unfolding along the axis of growth.
G. D. BOARDMAN in The Forum Jan., 1891, p. 538.

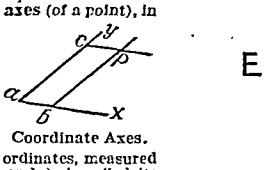
6. Crystal. An imaginary line between the opposite planes, edges, or solid angles of a crystal, to which its faces can be referred. 7. The central part of anything; the line about which parts of a body are symmetrically arranged; as, the cerebrospinal axis. See illus. under BONE. (1) Bot. The central body, part, line, or longitudinal support on, along, or above which organs or other parts are arranged. The stem is the ascending axis; the root is the descending axis. (2) Anat. A short arterial trunk from which several nearly equal branches radiate; as, the thyroid axis. (3) Entom. The small projecting portion of an elytron by which it is attached to the thorax. (4) Crust. The tergum of a trilobite. 8. Anat. The second cervical vertebra, or the large blunt tooth-like odontoid process which surmounts it and forms a pivot on which the atlas and head turn. See illus. under ARTICULATION. 9. Geol. & Geog. The main line of direction. (1) The crest-line of ranges, or the central line of troughs or valleys.

We took deep-sea soundings as we approached its [Baffin's Bay's] axis. KANE Arctic Explorations p. 14. [J. N. 1861.]

(2) The longitudinal line passing through the crests of anticlinal folds (anticlinal axis) or the lowest points of synclinal folds (synclinal axis); the line from which or toward which the strata slope. [L.]

— axes of coordinates, coordinate axes (of a point), in plane geometry, two intersecting lines in the same plane to which the position of that point is referred and by means of which, when its coordinates are known, that position is determined. If the two lines ax and ay are such axes, ax is called the axis of abscissas and ay the a. of ordinates, and the point a is called the vertex or origin. The distance of any point p from the axis of ordinates, measured parallel to the axis of abscissas (as pc or ba), is called its abscissa, and that from the axis of abscissas parallel to the axis of ordinates (as pb or ca) is its ordinate. In solid geometry the axes are three in number.— axes of elasticity (Crystal.), in biaxial crystals, the three lines along which the velocity of light, owing to the varying elasticity of the ether, is at maximum, mean, and minimum.— ax'is-cyl"inder, n. The essential central substance of a nerve-fiber. See illus. under NERVE. a.-band‡.— a. of a balance, the line about which the balance sways.— a. of a complex (Math.), a line along which a complex of lines may be moved or rotated without altering their condition.— a. of a gun, in the bore of a gun, a line passing through the middle of the cylinder.— a. of a lens, the line perpendicular to its sides. — a. of a regular pyramid (Geom.), a straight line drawn from the apex to the central point of the base.— a. of a spherical mirror (Physics), a right line drawn through the center of curvature of a mirror.— a. of a storm, same as STORM-CENTER.— a. of glacial movement (Geol.), the line which opposes least resistance to the movement of a glacier. — a. of homology, a. of similitude, see under HOMOLOGY and SIMILITUDE.— a. of oscillation, a straight line passing through the center about which a body vibrates, at right angles to the plane of motion.— a. of polarization (Optics), the line about which as a center the prismatic rings are arranged.— a. of refraction, a line perpendicular at the point of incidence to the plane of the refracting substance. — a. of rotation, the center about which a body rotates. a. of revolution‡.— a. of symmetry, a straight line about which the parts of a body are symmetrically arranged.— a. of the horizon, a straight line perpendicular to the horizon at the point of observation.— conjugate a., same as MINOR AXIS.— declination a. (Astron.), that axis of an equatorial telescope on which the telescope moves at right angles to the polar axis.— false a., same as SYMPODIUM.— harmonic a. (Math.), a ray that intersects a curve in the harmonic center of the intersections with the same curve of all the rays of a plane pencil.— hemal a., same as AORTA.— instantaneous a., the position at any given instant of an axis of rotation which is continuously altering its direction within the rotating body.— lateral axes (Crystal.), those axes which are not vertical.— magnetic a. 1. In a straight needle, the straight line passing through its poles. 2. In terrestrial magnetism, the straight line joining the opposite magnetic poles of the earth.— major a., that axis of a conic section which passes through its foci.— minor a., the axis of a conic section perpendicular to the major axis. — neutral a., that lengthwise line or plane in a beam or other member which is neither in compression nor in tension. — optic a., the axis of the eye; a straight line passing through the center of the pupil and that of the crystalline lens.— optic a. of a crystal, one of the directions in a crystal in passing along which a ray of light suffers no refraction. — principal a. of inertia, that one of three axes passing through the center of every solid body rotation upon which develops either a balance of the centrifugal forces or a reduction of them to a single force.— secondary a. Optics. 1. As applied to a mirror, any radius which passes outside of the center. 2. As applied to a lens, any straight line which passes through the center but is not coincident with the radii of curvature.— spiral a., the axis of a twisted shaft, drawn spirally to permit of tracing the external convolutions.— transverse a., same as MAJOR AXIS.— visual a., a straight line passing through the point of regard and central fovea of the retina: not the optic axis of the eye.— ax'ised, a. [Rare.] Having or rotating on an axis.— ax"i-sym-met'ric, a. Math. Symmetric about an axis.— axis} mmetric determinant, a determinant whose conjugate elements are equal in pairs.



Coordinate Axes.

ax'is², n. [L.] A small rusine deer (Cervus axis) of southern Asia, having the body spotted with white, and commonly domesticated in parks all over the world. See illus. on following page. axis deer†.

ax'le, } 1 aks'l; 2 ăks'l, n. 1. A cross-bar supporting a ax'le, } vehicle, and on or with which its wheel or wheels turn; an axletree. Axles are named (1) from the vehicle: as, car-axle, wagon-a., etc.; (2) in locomotives, iron- position or service performed; as, driving-a., leading or trailing-a. (ahead of or behind the drivers).

— ax'le-ad-just"er, n. An axle-setting machine.—

a.-arm, n. That portion of an axle which passes through a wheel-hub or center of rotation.— a.-bar, n. The bar connecting the arms of an axletree; the body or main part of a vehicle-axle.— a.-box, n. 1. A metal bushing or lining for a wheel-hub. 2. A journal-box.— a.-cap, n. A metal cover which protects the end of the axle-arm and the axle-nut.— a.-clip, n. See CLIP.— a.-guard, n. One of the plates between which axle-boxes slide vertically.— a.-gulde, n. A gulde which allows the boxes or the axles of a locomotive a certain amount of vertical movement, but prevents them moving horizontally.— a.-hook, n. A hook on an axle for the attachment of the doubletree or swingletree-chain.— a.-light system, a system of electric lighting of trains, the current being furnished by a dynamo operated from the car-axle.— a.-pin, n. A linchpin.— a.-saddle, n. A U-shaped clip to fasten the spring to the axle.— a.-setter, n. Same as SETTING-GAGE.— a.-skein, n. A tapering metal sleeve surrounding a wooden axle-spindle to protect it from wear.— a.-sleeve, n. A cylinder surrounding an axle, to hold it in place if it breaks.— a.-tooth, n. [Prov. Eng.] A molar tooth.— ax'le-tree", n. An axle; originally, a wooden axle. See AXLE, 1.

Neither was there any axle-tree or groove. HOGG Tales of Ettrick Shepherd, Allan Gordon in vol. i, p. 245. [n. s. 1837.]

— floating a., the part of the steering-gear of an automobile consisting of the steering-knuckle, arm, and drag.— mulay- or muley-a, n. 1. In a car, an axle without collars on its outer ends. 2. In a locomotive, an axle bearing a pair of flangeless wheels.— sleeve-a., n. A hollow axle surrounding and running upon another axle or shaft.— ax'led, a. Having an axle or axles; as, four-axled.

ax'man, } 1 aks'man; 2 äks'măn, n. [-MEN, pl.] 1. One axe-man, } who wields an ax. Specif.: (1) A woodman. (2) Civ. Engin. One who clears the ground and drives stakes for the rodman. 2. One who bore a battle-ax.

ax'mas"ter, 1 aks'mas-tər; 2 äks'más-ter, n. [Honduras.] An unclassified tree with very hard wood.

Ax'min-ster, 1 aks'min-stər; 2 äks'min-ster, n. A town in Devonshire, England; formerly noted for its carpets.— Axminster carpet, a carpet with a long soft pile, and originally hand-tufted. In 1839 J. Templeton invented a machine for introducing the tufts in the form of chenille. chenille a.†; Scotch a.†; Templeton a.†. Axminster carpets made in America are not usually chenille-woven.

ax'ode, 1 aks'ōd; 2 äks'ōd, n. The locus of the instantaneous axis of a body having motion in a plane. [W.] [< Gr. axōn, axis, + hodos, way.]

ax"o-den'drite, 1 aks'o-den'drait; 2 äks'o-dĕn'drit, n. Anat. A dendrite, or protoplasmic outgrowth, from the axis-cylinder of a nerve-cell. [< AXIS + DENDRITE.]

ax'oid, 1 aks'oid; 2 äks'ŏid, a. Anat. Of or pertaining to the axis. [< AXIS[1] + -OID.] ax"oi-de'an†.

ax'oid, n. Math. A curve generated by the revolution of a point about a moving center, as the cycloid, roulettes, etc.— ax-ol'di-an, a.

ax"o-lem'ma, 1 aks'o-lem'ə; 2 äks'o-lĕm'a, n. Anat. Same as AXILEMMA.

ax'o-lotl, 1 aks'o-lotl; 2 äks'o-lŏtl, n. [Mex.] A North-American tailed amphibian (genus Ambystoma), as A. mexicanum of Mexican lakes and marshes, which retains its external gills, and breeds in a larval state.

az'ı-ami, 1 az'ı-ąm; 2 ăz'ĭ-ăm, n. A Russian outer garment made of coarse, gray cloth, sometimes lined with astrakhan or sheepskin. [< Rus. azyamŭ.]

A-zl'am, 1 ą-zaı'ąm; 2 a-zĭ'am, n. Bib. (Douai).

az'ide, } 1. A hydrazoate. 2. A compound obtained by substituting an acid radical for the hydrogen of hydrazoic acid. [< AZOTE.] [1, 2.

A'zi-el, 1 ē'zı-el; 2 ā'zĭ-ĕl, n. Bib. 1 Chron. xv, 20.

a"zi-lut', 1 ä"tsī-lūt'; 2 ä"tsĭ-lų̆t', n. [Heb.] In the cabala, the emanation from or projection of the divine essence by means of which the universe was created.

A'zim, 1 ē'zım; 2 ā'zĭm, n. In Moore's Lalla Rookh, a young convert for, then against, the veiled prophet.

az'ı-menet, n. Astrol. A feeble or deficient degree, that when ascendant at birth produces lameness, blindness, or other infirmity.

Az"im-ghur', 1 az'ım-gur'; 2 ăz'ĭm-gŭr', n. Same as AZAMGARH.

az'ı-muth, 1 az'ı-muth; 2 ăz'ĭ-mŭth, n. Astron. 1. The angle or arc of the horizon that a vertical plane passing through a heavenly body makes with the meridian of the place of observation. 2†. The quadrant of an azimuth-circle. [< F. azimut, < Ar. as-sumūt, < al, the, + sumūt, pl. of samt, way.]
—az'ı-muth-cir"cle, n. An instrument for measuring azimuth, having for its chief characteristic a graduated horizontal circle.—a.-compass, n. A magnetic compass supplied with sights, for measuring the angle which a line on the earth's surface, or the vertical circle through a heavenly body, makes with the magnetic meridian.—a.-dial, n. A graduated horizontal dial with a vertical gnomon or stile, the shadow of which marks the sun's azimuth.—a. error, an error in the azimuth, usually caused by imperfection in the observing-instrument.—a. of the plane of polarization (Optics), the angle formed at the intersection of the plane of incidence with the plane of polarization.—magnetic a., the angle which a horizontal line makes with the magnetic meridian.—az'ı-muth"al, a. —az'ı-muth"al-ly, adv.

az'in, } 1 az'ın, -in or -īn; 2 ăz'ĭn, -in or -īn, n. Org. Chem. One of a group of compounds, many of which are important dyes, having a six-membered ring holding an atom of nitrogen and one or more non-carbon atoms, as of nitrogen, oxygen, or sulfur. The subclasses are known as diazins (having two nitrogen atoms in the ring), triazins (three nitrogen atoms), oxazins (one nitrogen, one oxygen), thiazins (one nitrogen, one sulfur), etc. [< AZOTE.]

az'ı-o'la, 1 az'ı-ō'lą; 2 ăz'ĭ-ō'la, n. [It.] A horned owl.
Sad Aziola I from that moment I Loved thee and thy sad cry. SHELLEY The Aziola st. 2.

A-zl'za, 1 ą-zaı'za; 2 a-zĭ'za, n. Bib. Ezra x, 27.

Az'la, 1 az'lą; 2 ăz'la, n. In Southey's The Curse of Kehama, Aryalan's widow, a suttee. [xxxiii, 31.

az-me'ra, 1 az-mē'rą; 2 ăz-mę'rā, n. pl. The light rains of April and May in Abyssinia, preceding the principal rainy season.

Az'mon, 1 az'mən; 2 ăz'mon, n. Bib. Num. xxxiv, 4.

Az"noth-ta'bor, 1 az'nęth-tē'bər; 2 ăz'nŏth-tā'bor, n. Bib. Josh. xix, 34.

az'o-, 1 az'o-; 2 ăz'o-. Derived from AZOTE (nitrogen): a combining form in organic chemistry: sometimes written as a separate adjective; as, azo compounds. (1) Applied loosely to compounds containing nitrogen, as nitric acid. (2) Applied to those substitution derivatives of the aromatic hydrocarbons in which two atoms of united nitrogen connect two similar hydrocarbon radicals of the benzene series; as, *azo*benzene. See DIAZO-.—az"o-ben'zene, n. Chem. A red crystalline azo-compound ($C_6H_5N.NC_6H_5$) formed by the action of reducing agents on nitrobenzene. az"o-ben'zid‡; az"o-ben'zol‡.—az'o-blue", n. A coal-tar colorimaterial, that dyes cotton, wool, and silk a fast blue.—az"o-com'pound, n. One of a series of compounds containing nitrogen, many of which yield brilliant dyes. See def. (2), above.—az"o-cyc'lic, a. Chem. Having a ring of nitrogen atoms, as in hydrazoic acid $\left(\begin{matrix}N\\ N\end{matrix}\!\!>\!NH\right)$.—az'o-dye", n. One of a series of coal-tar colors characterized by the special combination of radicals required in azo compounds.
Other words beginning with this prefix, will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

A-zof', 1 ą-zōf' or ē'zov; 2 ä-zōf' or ä'zŏv, n. 1. Sea of, N. E. of Crimea, S. Russia; 14,478 sq. m. 2. A fortified town N. E. of the Crimea, in the Caucasus. A-zov'‡.

a-zo'gue, 1 ą-sō'gē; 2 ä-sō'ġe, n. [Sp. Am.] 1. Quicksilver. 2. A quality of silver ore adapted for amalgamation with quicksilver.

a-zo"gue-rl'a, 1 ą-sō"gē-rī'ą; 2 ä-sō"ġe-rī'ä, n. [Sp.] Metal. 1. Amalgamating works. 2. The process of amalgamation.

A-zo'gues, 1 ą-sō'gēs; 2 ä-sō'ġes, n. The capital of Cañar province, Ecuador.

a-zo'ic, 1 ą-zō'ık; 2 a-zō'ic, a. Without organic life: said of rocks or strata having no fossil or other evidence that life existed at the time of their formation. [< Gr. azōos, < a- priv. + zōē, life, < zaō, live.]—Azoic age, the age preceding the beginning of organic life: formerly including all anterior to the Cambrian, now restricted to the older subdivision of the Archean.

A-zo'ic, n. The Azoic age.

az'ole, 1 a-'ōl or ą-zōl'; 2 ăz'ōl or a-zōl', n. Org. Chem. Any one of an extensive group of compounds having a five-membered ring containing one atom of nitrogen and one or more non-carbon atoms (nitrogen, oxygen, sulfur). Furo-, thio-, and pyrro- as prefixes characterize three subclasses of azoles considered as derivatives of furfurfane, thiophene, and pyrrol respectively by substituting nitrogen for the CH group; as, *furo*monazole. Names corresponding to those for the azins are employed also; as, oxazole, diazole, etc. [< AZOTE.]

az"o-lit'min, 1 az'o-lit'mın; 2 ăz'o-lĭt'mĭn, n. Chem. A reddish-brown amorphous compound ($C_7H_7NO_4$), which is the principal coloring-matter of litmus, and is used as an indicator. [< AZO- + LITMUS.]

A-zol'la, 1 ą-zol'ą; 2 a-zŏl'a, n. Bot. A genus of small moss-like floating plants of the salvinia family, having pinnately branched stems with floating rootlets on the under side, and 2-lobed imbricated leaves. [< Gr. azō, dry, + ollymi, kill.]

az"o-meth'ane, n. Chem. Hydrocyanic acid (HCN) considered as a nitrogen product of methane.

a-zon'ic, 1 ą-zon'ık; 2 a-zŏn'ic, a. Not peculiar to any zone or region; not local. [< Gr. azōnos, < a- priv. + zōnē, zone.]

a-zo'nl-um, 1 ą-zō'nı-um; 2 a-zō'nĭ-ŭm, a. Org. Chem. Naming or belonging to a mass of compounds (called azonium bases) having basic qualities caused by a particular grouping of nitrogen atoms.

az"o-ol'o-gy, 1 az'o-ęl'o-jı; 2 ăz'o-ŏl'o-ġy, n. [Rare.] The scientific study of inanimate nature. [M.] [< Gr. azōos, lifeless, + -LOGY.]

a-zo"o-sper'mi-a, 1 ą-zō"o-spūr'mı-ą; 2 a-zō"o-spĕr'mi-a, n. Pathol. Absence of or lack of vitality in the spermatozoa. [< Gr. azōos, lifeless, + sperma, seed.] a-zo"o-sper'ma-tism‡.

A'zor, 1 ē'zęr; 2 ā'zŏr, n. Bib. Matt. i, 13.

A-zores', 1 ą-zōrz'; 2 a-zōrs', n. pl. Islands in the N. Atlantic; a province of Portugal; 922 sq. m.; capital, Ponta Delgada.

A-zo'ri-an, 1 ą-zō'rı-ən; 2 a-zō'ri-an. I. a. Pertaining to the Azores or to their inhabitants. II. n. A native of the Azores.

az'o-rite, 1 az'o-raıt; 2 ăz'o-rīt, n. Mineral. Same as ZIRCON. [< Azores.] az'ote‡, 1 az'ōt or ą-zōt'; 2 ăz'ōt or a-zōt' (XIII), n. Chem. Nitrogen: formerly so called. The name was given by Lavoisier because the gas did not sustain life: still the accepted chemical name in France.

This is of course the color of the pure atmospheric air, not the aqueous vapor, but the pure azote and oxygen.
RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. i, p. 203. [w. & s. 1858.]
[F., < Gr. a- priv. + zaō, live.]—az'ot-ed, a. Containing or treated with nitrogen.

a-zo'te², 1 ą-thō'tē; 2 ä-thō'tę, n. [Sp.] A whip or its lash.

a"zo-te'a, 1 ä"thō-tē'ą; 2 ä"thō-te'ä, n. [Sp.] The flat roof of a house; also, a platform, as on a housetop.

az"o-te'mi-a, 1 az'o-tī'mı-ą; 2 ăz'o-tē'mi-a, n. 1. Pathol. An abnormal condition of the blood due to the presence of an excess of nitrogenous matter. 2. Vet. A similar disease in horses, resulting from excessive feeding and want of exercise. [< AZOTE¹ + Gr. haima, blood.]
az"o-te-nc'sis‡.

az'oth, 1 az'ęth; 2 ăz'ŏth, n. Alchemy. 1. Mercury: the name given by the alchemists. 2. The universal remedy of Paracelsus, a pretended preparation of gold, silver, and mercury. [< Ar. azzāūg, < al, the, + zāūg, < Per. zhīvah, quicksilver.]

a-zot'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing azote or nitrogen; unable to support life.—azotic acid, nitric acid. —a. air or gas, nitrogen.—az'o-tid, n. A nitrogenous substance; a nitrid.—az'o-tine, n. 1. A richly nitrogenous product, soluble in water, obtained by treating with superheated steam fabrics containing wool and cotton: used as a fertilizer. 2. A nitrate mixture used as an explosive. See list of EXPLOSIVES, 2. az'o-tint.—az'o-tite, n. Nitrite.—az'o-tize, tt. [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] To nitrogenize.—Az"o-to-bac'ter, n. A genus of bacteria widely distributed in soils. Some of the species, notably Azotobacter chroococcum, are able to fix the free nitrogen of the air.—az"o-tom'e-ter, n. A nitrometer.—az"o-tor-rhe'a, n. Excess of nitrogenous matter in the excretions.—az'o-tous, a. [Archaic.] Nitrous.—az"o-tu'ri-a, n. 1. Vet. A disease of horses caused by an excess of nitrogen compounds in the urine, and characterized by bloody urine and paralysis. 2. Same as AZOTEMIA, 1. [Mac. iv, 15.

a-zox'a-zol, 1 ą-zoks'ą-zol or -zęl; 2 a-zŏks'a-zōl or -zŏl, n. Same as FURAZAN.

az-ox'im, n. Org. Chem. A furodiazole (CH:N.O.CH:N), a hypothetical cyclic compound; also, a derivative of it. az-ox'ime‡.

az-ox'y-, 1 az-oks'ı-; 2 ăz-ŏks'y-. Derived from AZO- + OXY-: a combining form in organic chemistry, applied to compounds having a group of two nitrogen atoms and one oxygen atom joined to two univalent radicals: sometimes written as a separate word.—az-ox"y-ben'zene, n. Org. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound ($C_6H_5N.O.NC_6H_5$) obtained by reducing nitrobenzene with alcohol and sodium amalgam.

Az'ra-el, 1 az'rı-ęl; 2 ăz'ra-ĕl, n. The angel of death: so called in Hebrew and Mohammedan mythology.
It is the Angel men call Azrael, 'Tis the Death Angel; what hast thou to fear?
LONGFELLOW Wayside Inn, Azrael in pt. iii, st. 2

[< Heb. Azraël, help of God.] Az'ra-il‡.

Az're-el, 1 az'rı-ęl; 2 ăz'ra-ĕl, n. Bib. (Douai).

Az'ri-kam, 1 az'rı-kam; 2 ăz'ri-kăm, n. Bib. Neh. xi, 15.

Az-tal'an, 1 az-tal'ən; 2 ăz-tăl'an, n. A town in Jefferson county, Wis.

Az'tec, 1 az'tek; 2 ăz'tĕc, a. Of, pertaining to, or designating that one of the races of Mexico which was dominant at the time of the discovery of the country by Cortez in 1519. [< Azteca: native name.] Az'tec-an‡.

Az'tec, n. A member of the Aztec race, or its language, of Nahuatl or Uto-Aztecan stock. The Aztecs, when discovered, were far advanced in the arts and civilization. Their religion was polytheistic, and characterized by human sacrifices. They studied astronomy with success, and fixed the period of their festivals by the movements of the planets. Their descendants still retain the ancient language of their race. See AMERICAN.
The Aztecs came, according to native tradition, from a country to which they gave the name of Aztlan, usually supposed to lie towards the north-west, but the satisfactory localization of it is one of the greatest difficulties in Mexican history. The date of the exodus from Aztlan is equally undetermined, being fixed by various authorities in the 11th and by others in the 12th century. . . . They gradually increased their influence among other tribes, until, by union with the Toltecs, . . . they extended their empire to an area of from 18,000 to 20,000 square leagues.

Az'zur, 1 az'ur; 2 ăz'ûr, n. Bib. Neh. x, 17.

az'zy, 1 az'ı; 2 ăz'y, n. [Prov. Eng.] A wayward child.

B b Roman. 𝔅 𝔟 Black Letter. B b Script.

B, b, 1 bī; 2 bē, n. [BEES, B's, or Bs, 1 bīz; 2 bēs, pl.] 1. A letter: the second in the English alphabet, the eighteenth in the runic and Scandinavian alphabets. Its sound is produced by closing the lips while the vocal cords are tense and vibrant. Without the element of "voice," produced by the vibration of the cords, b becomes p. Both these sounds belong to the class variously called "explosives," "mutes," or "stops."

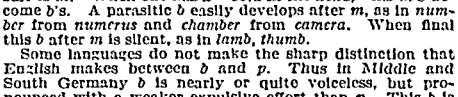
If, with the cords vibrating and the lips in position for b, the vocal current is sent through the nasal passage, the result is m. When one has a "cold in the head," his m's become b's. A parasitic b easily develops after m, as in number from numerus and chamber from camera. When final this b after m is silent, as in lamb, thumb.

Some languages do not make the sharp distinction that English makes between b and p. Thus in Middle and South Germany b is nearly or quite voiceless, but pronounced with a weaker expulsive effort than p. This b is simply a weak p, and to the unaccustomed ear the two sounds are indistinguishable. So also in Danish b differs from p, not by being voiced, but by being weaker.

Capital B is from L. Gr. B, < Old Gr. L. Runic ᛒ, < Old Gr. Ital. written, right to left 𐌁, < Phenician 𐤁, < Egyptian hieratic 𓃀, < hieroglyphic crane 𓃀. From B are derived uncial and cursive (Gr. β) L. AS. ƀ, > (monkish ♭) modern cursive b. In Phenician the derived letter is called beth (house), > Gr. beta, L. beta; in AS. beorc, birch; in Russian buki, beech. Simple phonetic naming begins with Latin be, > English be (1 bī; 2 bē).

When the Christian teachers replaced the old futhore with the Roman alphabet, B became the second letter, as in the Greek and Hebrew. Its place varies in Eastern alphabets. See A; ALPHABET; RUNE.

The above forms are repeated in connection, as follows:



Hieroglyphic Crane. Egyptian Hieratic. Phenician. Early Greek. Roman. English Script.

2. An abbreviation: (1) Bachelor. (2) Balbus; Bancus; be; been, the Common Bench; Baron; Bay; British; Brutus. (3) Before, as in B. C. or [b-] in nautical signals in a log-book. (4) Base; book. (5) Born; as, b. 1850. (6) Baumé's scale or hydrometer. (7) Blue sky. (8) Brass. (9) Old Law. The badge of a convicted blasphemer, the letter B stamped on the forehead.

> About 1650 the Maryland Colony enacted that if any person should deny the Holy Trinity, he should . . . for a second offense be branded as a blasphemer, the letter B being stamped on his forehead. . . . The law was reenacted as late as 1723.

Ba'al, 1 bē'əl; 2 bä'al, n. [BA'AL-IM, pl.] [Heb.] 1. The sun-god, the supreme male divinity of the ancient Syro-phenician nations: a generic term for god in many of the Syro-Arabian languages. Compare ASTARTE.

> Baal signifies "lord" or "master," and personifies the productive power of the sun. In the plural, Baalim, it means idols or Baals collectively, that had seats in various localities. For some account of his worship, see 1 Kings xviii. It formed parts of the names of various gods; as, Baal-berith (covenant Baal) of the Shechemites; Baal-zebub (Baal of flies) of the Philistines.
> The question as to the origin of the Worship of Baal among the Hebrews can only be settled by tracing it among the Semites in general and especially among the Babylonians. Here the name (Bel) is that of one of the earliest and most honored of national deities. Bel was the special god of Nippur, perhaps the oldest of Babylonian cities. Nippur was in the earliest known times a religious center, and the prestige of Bel was so great that when the city of Babylon became supreme his name was imposed upon that of Merodach, the patron deity of the capital, who was thenceforth known as Bel-Merodach or simply Bel (compare Isa. xlvi, 1). It would appear that the Hebrews first learned Baal-Worship from the agricultural Canaanites. Apart from the offerings of fruits from the earth and the firstlings of cattle, much is not known with regard to the rites of the popular Baal-Worship. The shrines were little more than altars with the symbol of the Ashtoreth planted beside it. Near by sacred pillars were also often reared. Jewish Encyc. vol. ii, pp. 379, 380.

Syn.: blurt, blurt out, cackle, chat, chatter, gabble, gossip, jabber, prate, prattle, twaddle. Most of these words are onomatopœic. The cackle of a hen, the gabble of a goose, the chatter of a magpie, the babble of a running stream, as applied to human speech, indicate a rapid succession of what are to the listener meaningless sounds. Blab and blurt (commonly blurt out) refer to the letting out of what the lips can no longer keep in; blab, of a secret; blurt out, of passionate feeling. To chat is to talk in an easy, pleasant way, not without sense, but without special purpose. Chatting is the practise of adults, prattling that of children. To prate is to talk idly, presumptuously, or foolishly, but not necessarily incoherently. To jabber is to express a rapid succession of unintelligible sounds, generally more noisy than chattering. To gossip is to talk of petty personal matters, as for pastime or mischief. To twaddle is to talk feeble nonsense. To murmur is to utter suppressed or even inarticulate sounds, suggesting the notes of a dove, or the sound of a running stream, and is used figuratively of the half-suppressed utterances of affection or pity, or of complaint, resentment, etc. Compare SPEAK.— Prep.: babies babble for the moon; the crowd babbles of a hero; the sick man babbles of home.

bab'ble, n. The murmuring, rippling sound of a stream; prattle, as of an infant; a confusion of sounds, as of a crowd; foolish or mischievous talk; gossip.

C.

Bab"y-lo'ni-an, n. 1. A native of Babylonia; a Chaldean. The first inhabitants of Babylonia were probably a non-Semitic race. They were possibly the originators of the cuneiform system of writing, to which is due nearly all our present information concerning Babylonia. The Semites invaded the land as early as 4000 B. C. The two populations inhabited the country together, the later one imbibing much of the culture of the earlier, and also gradually assuming political power. Anciently there were still other elements in the population — the Chaldeans, the Kassites, the Elamites, and, during the period of the foreign wars, great numbers of captives were brought in by the kings of Babylon and of Assyria. The literature of Babylonia was extensive; art, architecture, and some sciences, as astronomy, attained a high degree of development. Social organization was considerable, caste was unknown, but a priestly and military aristocracy existed. The army was raised by conscription, and it seems to have been the first standing army organized in the world. Compare ASSYRIAN. 2. An astrologer — the Chaldeans being the great astrologers of antiquity. 3. The language of Babylonia. 4. A form of ball game played with a large ball. 5†. A papist.

bad, v. Bade. S. S.: also obsolete form.

bad, 1 bad; 2 băd, a. [WORSE; WORST; also, BAD'DER†; BAD'DEST†.] [Bad is the general antithesis of good, shading from that which is distinctively and positively wicked or evil to that which possesses merely negative characteristics of unsatisfactoriness. Used in a negative sense bad denotes generally the lack of good qualities; in a positive sense bad conveys the idea of that which is physically or morally harmful; as, bad for the digestion; bad example; hence, in a moral sense, bad is virtually synonymous with evil.] 1. Having physical qualities that are injurious, disagreeable, or opposed to health or enjoyment; unpleasant; poor; as, bad water; bad food; a bad taste; bad weather; bad roads; a bad time. 2. Having or characterized by perverted moral qualities or instincts; vicious; wicked; pernicious; hence, unkind or unjust; as, a bad man; a bad life; bad treatment; a bad example.

So are riches given to good and bad; . . . but they are good only to the godly. BURTON Anat. Melancholy p. 352. [J. W. M. 1857.]

3. Lacking in or neglectful of social instincts, duties, or virtues; not affable or entertaining; unpleasant; as, a bad host; a bad neighbor. 4. Lacking or deficient in skill, adaptation to or for, or capacity in some particular; poor; as, a bad penman or horseman; a bad reader.

8. Aggravated or severe, as in character or aspect; troublesome; distressing; as, a bad case of fever; a bad cold or chill. In this sense bad sometimes verges upon pleonasm. "A severe or dangerous wound," "an intense pain," are preferable to "a bad wound" or "a bad pain." 9. Of a character to disappoint; different from what was expected or hoped; unfavorable; unfortunate; poor; as, bad news; a bad outlook. 10. Being in an unhealthy or diseased condition; ill; sick; as, I feel bad.

If you mean to express the idea that you are ailing in health 'feel bad' is correct. 'Feel bad' is synonymous with 'feel ill.' . . . One might as well say 'feel illy' as 'feel badly' if the latter were correct as applied to health. FRANK H. VIZETELLY Desk-Book of Errors in English p. 82. [F. & W. CO. '06.]

Syn.: adjust, counterpoise, equalize, neutralize, poise, weigh. — Ant.: mispoise, overbalance, overset, overthrow, tilt, tip over, tip the beam, upset, weigh down.

bal'ance, n. 1. A pair of scales; an instrument for weighing, especially for very delicate, accurate weighing, or for measuring physical force: often used in the plural, in which case either scale is called a balance, and the two a pair of balances. As used for scientific weighing, it consists of a horizontal lever vibrating in a vertical plane about a central knife-edged fulcrum, and having at each end a scale-pan or its equivalent suspended from a similar knife-edge.

Various kinds of balances are named (1) from the material to be weighed or controlled or the class of work in which the balance is to be employed; as, alloy-balance, analytical b., assay-b., bullion-b., chemical b., coin-b., ice-b., specific-gravity b., steam-b.; (2) from the principle employed; as, actinic balance, compensation b., electric b., expansive b., hydraulic b., hydrostatic b., hygrometric b., induction b., thermic b., torsion b.; (3) from peculiarities of construction or adjustment; as, bent-lever balance, micrometer-b., short-arm b., spiral b., spring b., tangent b.; (4) from their place of application; as, locomotive-balance; millstone-b.; (5) from their inventors or users or the place in which they are best known; as, Danish balance, Jolly b., Nicholson b., Plattner's b., Robervahl's b., Roman b., Wheatstone's b. (a Wheatstone bridge); (6) from the manner of working; as, automatic balance, automaton b., false b.

Balances.

1. Spring balance. 2. Antique Roman balance from Pompeii. 3. Pharmacists' balance. i, indicator; p, pan; r, rider-beam.

He [Zeus] holds the balance which decides human destinies. R. W. BROWNE Hist. Classical Lit. bk. i, p. 101. [B. & CO. 1852.]

And he . . . had a pair of balances in his hand. Rev. vi, 5.

2. The act of balancing or mentally comparing the qualities or importance of two things: especially, the act of estimating the values of two motives before making up the mind, or deciding on a course of conduct. 3. The state of being in equilibrium or of holding equal relations; equipoise; equality; as, to lose one's balance and fall.

A government may endure for several ages, though the balance of power and the balance of property do not coincide. HUME Essays, First Principles Govt. p. 24. [W. L. & CO.]

Balance, measure, and patience, these are the eternal conditions . . . of high success. M. ARNOLD Celtic Lit. p. 102. [S. E. & CO. 1867.]

4. Figuratively, the scale by which deeds and principles are weighed, and destinies are determined. 5. Com. (1) An equality between the credit and debit totals of an account. (2) The difference between such totals; excess on either side; as, the balance is $500.

A happy fierceness of manner will often help a man as much as a great balance at the banker's. THACKERAY Vanity Fair, p. 215. [D. F. & CO. 1885.]

(3) Hence, colloquially and inelegantly, remainder; surplus; as, he was absent the balance of the day.

Balance, in the sense of rest, remainder, residue, remnant, is an abomination. R. G. WHITE Words ch. 5, p 94. [H. & CO. 1870.]

Balance is a much-abused word. As an accountant's term, the balance is that which must be added to the less or subtracted from the greater of two amounts, as receipts and expenses, to make them equal, so as to "balance" the account; it does not properly denote what is left of anything after a part has been taken away; that is the remainder. "The balance of one's dinner" and "the balance of the evening" are at best objectionable colloquialisms. Say "the rest" or "the remainder."

6. [U. S.] Mil. In naval infantry practise, that part of a rifle which when carried without a fixed bayonet forms its center of gravity. 7. A counterpoise; make-weight; figuratively, a counter-consideration; set-off. 8. Horol. A contrivance which together with a hair-spring regulates the movement of a watch or clock; a balance-wheel. See WATCH, n. 9. An instrument for measuring electricity or its effects by opposing thereto some other force, especially gravity. 10. A scale of the balance. 11. A movement in dancing. 12. [B-] The constellation Libra. [F., < L. bilanx, having two scales, < bi- (see BI-) + lanx, dish.] SYN.: see REMAINDER.

— bal'ance-book", n. Com. A book recording the balanced accounts of debtor and creditor as drawn from the ledger.— b.-crank, n. Mech. A crank so weighted that the inertia of piston and connecting-rod is neutralized.— b.-dock, n. A floating dock balanced with water. See FLOATING DOCK.— b.-fish, n. The hammer-headed shark.— b.-lug, n. Naut. A lug-sail with a long boom, sometimes overreaching both stem and stern.— b. of power. 1. A state of affairs among a community of nations such that no single nation or a few in combination may acquire or possess a degree of power that endangers the independence of any other. 2. In a legislative body, the power of a small party to join with either of two larger ones and create a majority of the whole.— b. of trade, the difference between the money value of exports and imports, often said to be in favor of a nation when the value of its exports exceeds that of its imports, and unfavorable or against a nation when the value of imports is the larger.— b.-piston, n. Mach. An auxiliary piston used on a reciprocating engine to counteract the dead weight and steam-pressure of the valve and rod attached to it.— b.-rail, n. The rail or ridge supporting and balancing on pins the keys of an organ or piano.— b.-reef, rt. Naut. To reduce (a fore-and-aft sail) to the last reef.— b.-reef, n. Naut. A reef-band diagonally across a fore-and-aft sail.— b.-ring, n. A ring bearing the upper pivot of a watch-balance.— b.-sheet, n. A statement of open accounts in tabular form to show assets and liabilities, profit and loss.— b.-step, n. Mil. A squad-drill exercise in marching.— b.-vise, n. A watchmaker's tail-vise.— b.-wheel, n. The oscillating wheel of a watch or chronometer, which determines its rate.— Jolly b. (Physics), a delicate spring balance used in the determination of specific gravities.— to hold in b., to keep in a state of suspense.— to lay in b.‡, to deposit as a security or pledge.— to strike a b., to find the difference between debits and credits.

In the following compound words balance appears as the first member (1) because the common scale-balance or the equilibrium principle is employed in design, construction, or use; as, balance-barometer, b.-dynamometer, b.-rynd, b.-thermometer; (2) because the article forms part of a scale-balance; as, b.-beam, b.-pan; (3) because it forms, contains, or receives a counterpoise or counterweight; as, b.-bar, b.-bob, b.-box, b.-pit, b.-screw; (4) because the article named, or part of it, is counterpoised or counterweighted; as, b.-bridge, b.-cage, b.-crane, b.-engine, b.-gate, b.-knife, b.-level; b.-staff; (5) because it forms a part of or support to a balance-wheel, or is used for holding or working one; as, b.-cock, b.-pallet, b.-plate, b.-potance or -pottance, b.-regulator, b.-rim, b.-spring, b.-verge, b.-vise; (6) because it employs or is operated by the principle (a) of equalization of amounts, as of electric current, dimensions, area of surface or of section, or (b) of similar position and influence; as, b.-book, b.-electrometer, b.-frame, b.-rudder, b.-section, b.-valve.

bal'ance-ment, 1 bal'əns-ment or -mənt; 2 băl'anç-ment, n. 1. The act or means of balancing; state of equipoise; compensation. 2. Biol. The compensation of growth or development in organisms by virtue of which the excessive development of one organ or part leads to the dwarfing or starving of others.

bal'anc-er, 1 bal'əns-ər; 2 băl'anç-er, n. One who or that which balances. (1) A rope-dancer; an acrobat. (2) Entom. One of the halteres or poisers of a dipter or a male coccid. (3) Herp. An elongate process in front of the gills of certain larval tailed amphibians. (4) One that maintains the balance of power.

Its classic form is doubtful, but it is said to have operated on the principle of the bow. In medieval warfare the term was applied to various engines, as the mangonel, petronel, and catapult.

His only son, a beautiful and valiant youth, was pierced through the heart by a javelin, shot from one of the ballistæ.

GIBBON Rome vol. ii, p. 226. [P. S. & CO. 1852.]

Two Forms of Ballista.
1. Medieval crossbow ballista. 2. A classical form.

2. Anat. The ankle-bone. [L., < Gr. ballō, throw.]

bal'lis-ter, 1 bal'ıs-tər; 2 băl'ıs-ter, n. A baluster.

bal-lis'tic, 1 ba-lis'tik; 2 bă-lĭs't.c, a. Of or pertaining to (1) the ballista, or (2) projectiles, or the science of their use, movements, or construction.— ballistic board (Ordnance), a board on which ballistic records, as of distance, wind-pressure, etc., are placed in such a way as to assist in securing precision in firing seacoast ordnance. — b. curve, the curve which a projectile describes when thrown in any except a vertical direction. The parabola is the theoretical type.— b. galvanometer, a form of galvanometer for measuring transitory currents; its deflected element has a considerable moment of inertia, in which respect it is the exact opposite of an aperiodic galvanometer, and all damping is carefully eliminated. In this type of galvanometer, a reading is taken of the single throw or impulse communicated to the needle by a sudden current in the coils, instead of noting the permanent deflection. See GALVANOMETER.— b. pendulum. 1. A contrivance for measuring the velocity of projectiles, usually consisting of a pendulum with a block at its lower part into which the ball is shot at short distance. The force of the impact is determined from the amount of oscillation of the pendulum and the weights of the pendulum and of the projectile. 2. A gun pendulum.

bal"lis-ti'cian, 1 bal'ıs-tish'ən; 2 băl'ıs-tish'an, n. One skilled in the use or science of projectiles.

bal-lis'tics, 1 ba-lis'tiks; 2 bă-lĭs'tics, n. Mil. The science that deals with the impact, path, and velocity of projectiles.— exterior ballistics, the science of the forces operating upon a projectile during its flight.— interior b., the science of the forces operating in the bore of the gun, behind the projectile.

bal'lis-tite, 1 bal'ıs-tait; 2 băl'ıs-tıt, n. See LIST OF EXPLOSIVES (5).

bal'll-um, 1 bal'ı-ŭm; 2 băl'ı-ŭm, n. [LL.] Same as BAILEY.

ball'-clev"er, b.-mine, etc. See BALL¹, n.

bal"lon', 1 ba"lōn'; 2 bă"lōn', n. [F.] 1. A form of geological upheaval resulting in rounded dome-shaped mountains.

The Ballons of the Vosges and of Normandy,—so called from the rounded, balloon-like domes characteristic of the mountains of that time. AGASSIZ Geol. Sketches sketch v, p. 146. [T. & F. 1866.]

2†. A bale. 3†. A balloon.

bal"lo-net', 1 bal'o-net'; 2 băl'o-nĕt', n. [F.] 1. A small balloon. 2. A balloonet.

bal"lon"sonde', 1 ba"lon'-sōnd'; 2 bă"lôn"-sônd', n. [F.] Same as SOUNDING-BALLOON.

bal-loon', 1 ba-lūn'; 2 bă-lōōn', v. I. t. [Rare.] To carry up or through the air as in a balloon.

II. i. 1. To ascend or move through the air in a balloon.

When Wise the father tracked the son, ballooning through the skies,
He taught a lesson to the old,—go thou and do like Wise!
HOLMES Meeting of Harvard Alumni, 1857 st. 15.

2. To swell out like a balloon; as, the sails balloon. 3. Med. To distend any cavity of the body with air for therapeutic purposes.

bal-loon'¹, n. 1. A bag, usually inverted, of varnished silk or other very light material, which, when inflated with any gas lighter than air, as heated air or carbureted hydrogen, rises and floats in the air; also, such a bag with its accessories, including, in large balloons, a suspended car or basket for passengers. See AERONAUTICS; AIR-SHIP; AVIATION.

The principle by which a balloon rises in the atmosphere is exactly the same as that which causes the ascent of a cork from the bottom of a vessel filled with water. B. Dict.

2. Arch. A sphere upon the top of a pillar. 3. Chem. A balloon-shaped glass receiver, or such a vessel fitted with a stop-cock and made adaptable for the weighing of gases. 4. In comic pictures, a balloon-shaped outline connected with the mouth of a person, containing the words he is represented as speaking. 5. A reel on a warp-drying machine. 6. A variety of pyrotechnic bomb. 7. The spherical mass into which cotton forms in a ring-frame. 8. Hort. A method of training fruit-trees in which the branches are curved from a height of 6 or 7 feet down to the ground, forming the shape of a balloon; also, a balloon-shaped trellis on which to train plants. [M.] 9†. A ball like a football, or the game played with it. [Formerly baloon, a ball used in a game like football, < It. ballone, aug. of balla, < MHG. bal; see BALL², n.] — balloon boiler, a balloon-shaped boiler.— bal-loon'-fish", n. A gymnodont fish, as a tetrodontid or diodontid, that can inflate itself by taking air into the esophagus or belly; a globefish.— b. flower, n. A hardy, erect, smooth, herbaceous ornamental perennial (Platycodon grandiflora) from eastern Asia, 6 to 9 inches high, often opposite or whorled subsessile ovate-lanceolate leaves and large terminal blue widely bell-shaped flowers, which in bud suggest balloons. See PLATYCODON.— b.-foresail, n. A light foresail used by yachts in fair weather. b.-sail†.— b. frame, the frame of a board structure, as a house, built with slight scantling, put together without mortise-and-tenon framing.— b.-jib, n. A light triangular sail between the foretopmast-head and the jib-boom end: used mostly by yachts in light winds.— b.-kite, n. A balloon in the form of an elongated gas-bag which tilts to the wind and is carried up like a kite: used in the Prussian army to carry a military observer to a height of 200 to 300 feet.— b.-net, n. See LACE.— b.-sickness, n. An abnormal condition characterized by headache, nausea, and nosebleed, that occurs at great altitudes and is due to lowered atmospheric pressure and deficiency of oxygen.— b.-vine, n. A tropical American climbing herb (Cardiospermum halicacabum) of the soapberry family (Sapindaceæ), widely cultivated, bearing inflated membranaceous 3-celled pods. See illus. under HEARTSEED.— captive b., a balloon that is permitted to rise only the length of a rope which holds it to the ground.— pilot b., a small balloon sent up before dispatching a large one, to show the direction and velocity of the wind. trial b.‡.— sausage-b. A sausage-shaped balloon having an additional air-bag, to keep in position. sau'sage‡.— sounding-b., n. A balloon sent up unmanned for obtaining meteorological data by means of automatically registering instruments.

So-called sounding balloons, for meteorological investigation, have reached much greater heights.
V. LOUGHEED Vehicles of the Air p. 75. [R. & R. '09.]

— bal-loon'er-y, n. Aeronautics. bal-loon'ry‡.

bal-lo'on², 1 ba-lō'ən; 2 bă-lō'ŏn, n. [E. Ind.] A long many-oared galley built like a canoe or dugout: used as a state barge in Siam and Burma. bal-lo'en‡; bal'long‡.

bal-loond', pp. Ballooned. S. S.

bal-loon'et, n. A small bag usually of varnished silk inflated with air, kept inside a spherical or dirigible balloon, for the purpose of retaining its shape after loss of gas, as by condensation or release.— bal-loon'ine, n. A varnish of rubber dissolved in benzin and carbon disulfid, for coating balloon-silk to make it impervious to gas.— bal-loon'ing, n. 1. The science or art of using, managing, or making excursions in balloons; aeronautics. 2. The rising of scum to the surface of water in a steam-boiler through the action of steam that is released therefrom. 3. Med. Dilatation of passages or cavities in the body by inserting empty bags which are afterward inflated. 4. [Slang.] Inflation of the stock-market, or of a stock; in politics, extravagant laudation or puffing of a candidate.— bal-loon'ist, n. An aeronaut. bal-loon'er‡. [vine. See BALLOON.

bal-loon'-fish", b.-flower, b.-jib, b.-net, b.-sickness, b.-vine. See BALLOON.

bal'lot, 1 bal'ət; 2 băl'ot, v. I. i. 1. To cast a ballot; vote or take a vote by ballot. 2. To draw lots; as, to ballot for seats. 3. Gunnery. To bound from side to side, as a spherical shot traveling along the bore of a smooth-bore gun when there is space between the shot and the bore. II. t. 1. To choose by lot, as for military service. 2. To cast the ballot for, or choose by ballot. 3. To jump (a ball) from side to side: said of a cannon. [< F. ballotter, ballot, < ballotte; see BALLOT, n.] bal'lot¹, n. 1. The written or printed paper that expresses a voter's choice: often called a ticket. 2. A method of election or choice by voting with tickets or balls, which are placed in a box or urn in such manner that the voter can conceal his choice if he so desires. In balloting with balls, a white ball approves a candidate or measure, and a black one rejects.

On the 25th of April [1833] he [George Grote] moved, 'that it is expedient that the votes at elections for members of Parliament be taken by way of ballot.'
KNIGHT England vol. viii, p. 149. [A. D. EX. 1880.]

In 1872 Mr. Forster's Ballot Act introduced the ballot in all parliamentary and municipal elections, except parliamentary elections for universities. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. iii, p. 280.

3. The act of voting as described above; also, the whole number of votes so cast at any one time or place; as, three ballots were taken; the ballot was unusually large. 4. A little ball used in voting: the original sense. [< F. ballotte, ballot, < balle; see BALL¹, n.] — Australian ballot, a method of voting in which the ballots, printed by the government and bearing the names of all the candidates of all parties, are given to each voter as he enters a stall, alone, that he may, while thus secluded, designate the candidates he desires to vote for, thus securing absolute secrecy and liberty. Many States of the United States have adopted this system, or some modification of it.— bal'lot-box", n. A closed box with an aperture for receiving ballots.— b.-stuffing, n. U. S. Polit. Hist. The act or offense of placing in a ballot-box illegal votes: now prevented in some States by changed methods of voting. b.-box stuffing‡.— blanket b., a ballot bearing the names of the candidates of all parties.— letter b., a ballot forwarded to a prospective voter by mail, as for the election of officers of public institutions.

Society can never prosper, but must always be bankrupt, until every man does that which he was created to do.
EMERSON Conduct of Life, Wealth p. 92. [o. & co. 1876.]

— bankrupt law, a law authorizing and regulating judicial proceedings in relation to bankrupt persons and their estates. A bankrupt law is designed (1) to determine the actual bankruptcy of a debtor; (2) to take judicial possession of his assets for equitable distribution among creditors; (3) to grant to the debtor himself by judicial decree, in every proper case, a full discharge from legal liability for his indebtedness. Formerly bankrupt laws applied only to merchants and traders; laws relating to the insolvency of other persons were called insolvent laws. In England this distinction terminated with the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, while the United States federal laws of 1841 and 1867 did not restrict their application to traders. But the terms bankrupt law, bankruptcy law, and insolvent law are now often used indiscriminately. Owing, however, to the fact that the Constitution of the United States confers on Congress power to establish a uniform rule on the subject of "bankruptcies," State statutes relating to bankruptcy and insolvency are generally called insolvency laws.

The bankruptcy system of the United States is now embodied in the National Bankruptcy Act of 1898 as amended by the Act of 1903. . . . . The acts of bankruptcy do not include . . . . non-payment by the debtor of his debts. A debtor can therefore only be adjudicated a bankrupt on the ground of indebtedness with his own consent in writing. . . . Involuntary proceedings can only be taken against debtors owing $1,000 or over, with certain exceptions. A petitioning creditor's debt must amount to $500.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed. vol. iii, p. 322.

bank'rupt, n. 1. Loosely, any person, especially a trader, unable to pay his bills or without credit or resources; by extension, one unable to meet obligations. 2. Law. (1) One who is unable to make payment of a just debt when due and demanded of him.

In vain at Court the bankrupt pleads his cause.
POPE Moral Essays ep. iii, l. 217.

(2) A person who has been judicially ascertained to be insolvent and adjudged to be discharged from his indebtedness on surrender of his property for distribution among his creditors under a decree of court. (3) Old Eng. Law. One who hides himself or his property so as to defraud creditors. [< F. banqueroutte, < It. banca rotta, < banca (< LL. banca, < MHG. banc), bank, + rotta, f. of rotto, broken, < L. ruptus, pp. of rumpo, break.]

bank'rupt-cy, 1 baŋk'rupt-si; 2 bąnk'rŭpt-çy, n. [-CIES, 1 -siz; 2 -çiş, pl.] 1. The state of being bankrupt or insolvent; financial ruin; failure or inability to pay just debts. In the United States the courts of bankruptcy are the federal district courts, the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of the various Territories of the Union. They are invested with such jurisdiction in law and at equity as will enable them to exercise original jurisdiction in bankruptcy proceedings. In England and Wales bankruptcy is mainly regulated by the Bankruptcy Acts of 1883, 1887, and 1890 and rules made thereunder. The system is subject to the control of the Board of Trade and is administered by the Bankruptcy Division of the High Court of Justice. 2. Serious or final loss of any good quality, as of faith, reputation, etc. bank'rupt-ism†. Syn.: see INSOLVENCY.
— commissioner of bankruptcy, a judicial officer authorized by law to investigate and adjudicate upon cases in bankruptcy.— discharge in b., the discharge of a bankrupt debtor by judicial decree from liability for any debt which had been or might have been proved against him in proceedings in bankruptcy.— involuntary b., proceedings in bankruptcy instituted against a debtor by his creditors. In the United States no person can be made an involuntary bankrupt unless (1) his debts aggregate at least $1,000, (2) an act of bankruptcy has been committed, or (3) the valuation of his assets is less than the amount of his debts. — voluntary b., bankruptcy and discharge decreed on the petition of a debtor.

bant'er, n. 1. Good-natured ridicule.

When wit has any mixture of raillery, it is but calling it banter, and the work is done. This polite word of theirs was first borrowed from the bullies in Whitefriars, then fell among the footmen, and at last retired to the pedants. SWIFT Works, Tale of a Tub; Author's Apology p. 47. [W. P. N. 1871.]

2. [Local, U. S.] A challenge to a fight, race, or other contest; also, the contest itself.— ban'ter-y, a.

Syn.: badinage, chaff, derision, irony, jeering, mockery, raillery, ridicule, sarcasm, satire. Banter is the touching upon some fault, weakness, or fancied secret of another in a way half to pique and half to please; badinage is delicate, refined banter. Raillery has more sharpness, but is usually good-humored and well meant. Irony, the saying one thing that the reverse may be understood, may be either mild or bitter. All the other words have a hostile intent. Ridicule makes a person or thing the subject of contemptuous merriment; derision seeks to make the object derided seem utterly despicable — to laugh it to scorn. Chaff is the coarse witticism of the streets, perhaps merry, oftener malicious; jeering is loud, rude ridicule, as of a hostile crowd or mob. Mockery is more studied, and may include mimicry and personal violence, as well as scornful speech. A satire is a formal composition; a sarcasm may be an impromptu sentence. The satire shows up follies to keep people from them; the sarcasm hits them because they are foolish, without inquiring whether it will do good or harm. The satire is plainly uttered; the sarcasm is covert.

Ban'tu, n. pl. 1. Members of any one of the numerous dolichocephalic mesognathous tribes of Africa south of 4° N. lat., excluding the Bushmen, Hottentots, Namaguas, and Pigmies. They are a Negro people mixed with Hamitic and other elements. The word is the most widely used term for " men " or " people " among these various tribes.

Thus (in the purer forms of the Bantu languages) muntu means 'a man,' bantu means 'men.'
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. iii, p. 356.

That branch of the true Negro stock which spoke the mother tongue of the Bantu languages some 3,000 years ago (according to Sir Harry Johnston's estimate) spread over the area of what is now Uganda and British East Africa. In the forest region these people probably mixed with Negrittos and possibly with the most northerly representatives of the Bushmen. Here also they came in contact with the Hamitic peoples coming down from the north and their amalgamation constituted a new breed of Negro — the Bantu. A. C. HADDON Races of Man, p. 32. [S. & CO. '10.]

— Bantu languages, a linguistic family of African tongues deriving origin from a hypothetical parent speech of which the most archaic representatives at the present day are those of Uganda, Tanganyika, and Zambesi; they are pronominal and prefix-using or agglutinative speeches, the root being unchangeable, and the vowel sounds always of the Italian type. The south-central group including the Zulus use a peculiar click sound probably borrowed from the Hottentots. See LANGUAGE.

bap'tism, 1 bap'tizm; 2 băp'tĭsm, n. 1. The act of baptizing; a sacrament, ordinance, or rite commanded by Christ (Matt. xxviii, 19), in which water is made use of, to initiate the recipient into the Christian Church, or to symbolize purification or spiritual burial and resurrection with Christ, or to signify or seal union with Christ as Savior and Lord, or to acknowledge consecration to Christ. Different views are held regarding (1) the proper subjects of baptism — whether believers only, or believers and their children, or others besides these; (2) the ritual act — whether by immersion, affusion (pouring), or sprinkling; (3) its efficacy — whether a mere rite or symbol, an ordinance indicating and sealing spiritual grace and regeneration already possessed, or a sacrament conferring these.

Melanchthon's doctrine is identical with Luther's. He says that God inscribes 'by means of the water his promise' in a certain sense 'upon our bodies.' The Reformers were convinced that children must be baptized in order to be saved; for on account of original sin they also need pardoning and renovating grace. . . . It is evident that Calvin counts baptism only among the normal means which bind the elect to the Church.
New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. vol. i, p. 439.

The principal effects of baptism are: (1) The remission of all sin, original and actual. . . . (2) But baptism not only washes away sin, it also remits the punishment of sin. . . . (3) Another effect of baptism is the infusion of sanctifying grace. . . . (4) Theologians likewise teach that baptism gives man the right to those special graces for which the sacrament was instituted. . . . (5) Finally, baptism, once validly conferred, can never be repeated . . . baptism is said to impress an ineffaceable character on the soul. Catholic Encyc. vol. ii, p. 268.

2. A religious ablution signifying purification or consecration, as that by which proselytes were Judaized, or the Roman Catholic christening of bells.

The Fathers themselves were the first to recognize that 'the devil too, had his sacraments,' and that the Eleusinian, Isiac, Mithraic and other mystæ used baptism in their rites of initiation.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. iii, p. 369.

3. Chr. Sci. Immersion in and cleansing by the Divine Spirit. bap"ti-za'tion†.

— baptism for the dead, in the opinion of good authorities, the baptism after death, or of a living substitute, of some one who died unbaptized. 1 Cor. xv, 29.— b. of blood (Christian Ch. Hist.), death as a martyr before baptism: considered as a substitute for and equivalent to the actual rite. — b. of or by desire, justification received without baptism by a person who loves God, and desires but can not obtain the rite.— b. of fire. 1. Theol. (1) The baptism of the Holy Ghost, in distinction from the sacrament of baptism, (Acts ii, 3, 4), or (2) the overwhelming with judgment or suffering: variously understood. 2. Martyrdom. 3. The initiatory experience of a soldier in actual battle. 4. Figuratively, any crucial ordeal or heartrending grief. — clinic or clinical b., bedside baptism in case of approaching death.— conditional or hypothetical b., in the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches, baptism administered with a conditional formula before the sacramental words when it is not known whether the candidate has been baptized, or validly baptized, before.

bap-tis'mal, 1 bap-tiz'mal; 2 băp-tĭz'mal, a. Of or pertaining to baptism; as, baptismal font, name, vow, etc. — baptismal character, the seal of baptism, in which spiritual grace is held to be conferred, so that a repetition of the rite would be sacrilege.— b. name, the name given at baptism.— b. regeneration, regeneration by baptism; the doctrine that baptism is a vehicle of grace pledging the forgiveness of sins and initiating a life of grace.— bap-tis'mal-ly, adv.

My brother gave that name to me When we were children twain,
When names acquired baptismally Were hard to utter.
E. B. BROWNING The Pet-Name st. 7.

Bap'tist[1], 1 bap'tist; 2 băp'tĭst, n. Ch. Hist. 1. One of a Christian denomination basing its polity on the New Testament only, and holding that the only valid Christian baptism is the immersion of a convert upon his credible profession of faith in Christ, and also that the visible Church is properly constituted only of those who have been regenerated and baptized.

The Baptists as a distinct denomination date from the time of the Reformation. They were at one time opprobriously termed Anabaptists. In 1611, owing to persecution, many Baptists fled to America, they first organized Baptist church being founded by Roger Williams at Providence, R. I., in 1639. Meanwhile the English Baptists in 1611, 1644, and 1646 published their Confessions of Faith; in 1689 a General Assembly in London issued a Confession in 32 articles together with a Catechism. The English Baptists were divided into two sections, the General or Arminian (1609) and the Particular or Calvinistic (1633), but these were finally united in 1891. The first Baptist church in Scotland was established in Caithness in 1750. The Baptists are trinitarians, and their churches are congregational in government. Those who maintain that total immersion is necessary for communion are called close communionists, as opposed to the open communionists. The total number of Baptists in the United States is estimated at about 6,000,000; and in the United Kingdom 1,500,000, while the total number of English-speaking Baptists is estimated at 9,230,000.

2. The designation of various bodies of Christians, differing in some of their doctrines, but holding the immersion of the believer to be the only Christian baptism. 3. One of any non-Christian denomination employing a mode of baptism, as the Mandeans. 4. [Archaic.] One who administers baptism; as, John the Baptist (Matt. xiv., 2).

Where is the lore the Baptist taught?

[< OF. baptiste, < LL. baptista, < Gr. baptistēs, < baptizō; see BAPTIZE.] See SE-BAPTIST.

— Baptist Church of Christ, an organization founded in Tennessee about 1808, holding to general atonement and practising foot-washing as a religious ordinance.— Calvinistic Baptists, that part of the Baptist denomination which adheres to the doctrines of Calvin as distinguished from those of Arminius. Compare REGULAR BAPTISTS. — Free or Free-will B., one of a body of Baptists that originated in New Hampshire in 1780, rejecting the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination and practising open communion.— General Baptists, a body of Baptists formed from the older English type in Kentucky in 1824 who agree in doctrine more closely with the Regular Baptists than do the Free Baptists. They adopted open communion in 1830.— German B., see DUNKER[1].— Landmark B., one of a body of Baptists found principally in the southwestern United States who deny fellowship with the Pedo-Baptists and the validity of their baptism.— Old,Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit Predestinarian B., a follower of a strongly Calvinistic sect formed in Tennessee in 1806, whose doctrine maintained a belief in a dualistic origin of good and evil, and opposed "modern institutions" and a paid ministry. — Original Free-will B., one of a small body of Baptists arising in North Carolina in 1729, who adopted their name to distinguish themselves from the larger body in New Hampshire, from whom they differ in the practise of foot-washing and anointing the sick with oil.— Primitive or Old School B., one of an extremely Calvinistic body, popularly called Anti-Mission and "Hardshell" Baptists, originating in New York and Pennsylvania about 1835 in opposition to missionary, Bible, tract, and temperance societies, Sunday-schools, theological seminaries and colleges, etc.— Regular Baptists, a Calvinistic body of Baptists originating in Rhode Island in 1639 and forming the bulk of this denomination. In 1845 differences arose concerning the slavery question which divided the church into two sections, the North and the South.— Separate B., one of a body of Baptists in Indiana who owe their origin to their dissent from the Whitefield revival, agreeing in doctrine generally with the Free Baptists.— Seventh-Day B., one of a body of Baptists, arising in England in the 16th century and organized in Rhode Island in 1671, who observe the seventh day, of the week, or Saturday, as the Sabbath.— Six-Principle B., one of a body of Baptists organized in 1690 on the basis of the six principles—repentance, faith, baptism, laying on of hands, resurrection of the dead, and eternal life. The Six Principles are a survival of the General Baptists who flourished in Rhode Island and Connecticut in 1639, and their churches are gradually becoming extinct.— United Baptists, a body of Baptists, of modified Calvinistic doctrine, formed by the union of Regular and Separate Baptists in Kentucky in 1801. They practise close communion and insist upon foot-washing as an essential ordinance.

ba-ro', 1 ba-rō'; 2 bä-rō', n. [P. I.] A shirt-like article of clothing worn by both sexes: Tagalog term.

Ba-roach', 1 ba-rōch'; 2 bä-rōch', n. See BROACH.

Ba-roc'ci, 1 ba-roch'ı; 2 bä-rōch'ı, Fiori Frederigo d'Urbino (1528–9/-1612). An Italian painter; Descent from the Cross, etc.

Ba-roc'ci-o, 1 ba-rō'cho; 2 bä-rō'cho, Giacomo da Vignola (10/21507–7/21573). An Italian architect; succeeded Michelangelo as architect of St. Peter's, 1564; designed the Escurial. Ba-roz'zi‡.

ba-ro'co, 1 ba-rō'ko; 2 ba-rō'co, a. [It.] Same as BAROQUE, a., 1. ba-roc'co‡; bar'ock‡.

bar"o-cy"clo-nom'e-ter, 1 bar'o-sai'klo-nom'ı-tər; 2 băr'o-çy"clo-nŏm'e-ter, n. Meteor. An instrument devised by J. Algué for ascertaining the direction, distance, and movement of tropical hurricanes. [BARO(METER) + CYCLO(NE) + -METER.]

bar"o-cy-clon'o-scope, 1 bar'o-sai-klen'o-skōp; 2 băr'o-çy-clŏn'o-scop, n. An aneroid barometer having triple indexes to show the course of the wind, the direction of the storm-center, and the course which ships should steer to avoid it. [Gr. baros, weight, + CYCLONOSCOPE.]

Ba-ro'da, 1 bə-rō'də; 2 ba-rō'da, n. 1. A native state in Gujarat, Bombay, India; 8,226 sq. m. 2. Its capital.

Ba-ro'dis, 1 bə-rō'dıs; 2 ba-rō'dis, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). 1 Esd. v, 34.

bar'o-graph } 1 bar'o-graf; 2 băr'o-grăf, n. An instru-bar'o-graf', } ment that registers graphically and continuously the atmospheric pressure; a self-recording barometer: used by aeronauts for recording altitudes. [< Gr. baros, weight, + graphō, write.] bar"o-met'ro-graph‡.— bar'o-gram, n. The record of a barograph. — bar"o-graph'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a barograph or a barogram.

A Barograph, with chart frame for displaying a record of atmospheric pressure.

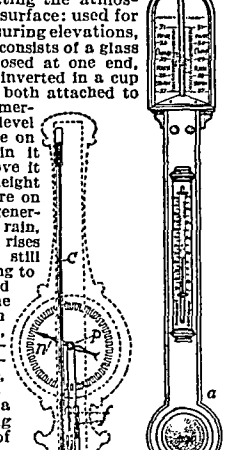
1. Cylinder which carries the chart. 2. Exhausted box. 3. Lever, controlling the pen. 4. In contact with cylinder.

bar"o-gy'ro-scope, 1 bar'o-jai'ro-skōp; 2 băr'o-ġy'ro-scōp, n. Mech. A gyrostat used in experimental illustration of the rotation of the earth. [< Gr. baros, weight, + GYROSCOPE.]

ba-rol'o-gy, 1 bə-rel'o-ji; 2 ba-rŏl'o-ġy, n. The science of gravity or of the weight of bodies. [< Gr. baros, weight, + -LOGY.]

bar"o-ma-crom'e-ter, 1 bar'o-mə-krom'ı-tər; 2 băr'o-ma-crŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for weighing newborn infants and for measuring their length. [< Gr. baros, weight, + makros, long, + metron, measure.]

ba-rom'e-ter, 1 bə-rem'ı-tər; 2 ba-rŏm'e-ter, n. 1. An instrument for indicating the atmospheric pressure per unit of surface: used for forecasting the weather, measuring elevations, etc. The mercurial barometer consists of a glass tube, 33 or 34 inches long, closed at one end, filled with pure mercury and inverted in a cup also containing pure mercury, both attached to a graduated standard. The mercury in the tube sinks to the level at which atmospheric pressure on that in the cup will sustain it (about 30 inches), leaving above it a nearly perfect vacuum. Its height is proportioned to the pressure on the mercury in the cup. It generally falls at the approach of rain, snow, wind, or storm, and rises at the approach of dry or still weather, also varying according to height above the sea, and slightly at different hours. The barometer was invented in 1643 by Evangelista Torricelli, a pupil of Galileo. A commoner and more portable barometer, tho less accurate, is the aneroid. See ANEROID.



Barometers.

1. Back sectional view of a wheel-barometer. c, column of mercury; f, floats; n, needle; p, pulley. 2. A mercurial barometer, with thermometer attached. a, reservoir for cistern.

2. Loosely, any device, as a hygroscope, for indicating conditions or changes of weather; as, the balance-barometer. See BALANCE.

Many varieties of barometer take their names (1) from the inventor; as, Adie's barometer (a symplesometer), Blakesley's portable b., Bourdon's b., Hines' minimum b., Fortin's b., Gay-Lussac's b., Hooke's b., Howson's b. (with free cistern, the rise or fall of which indicates the pressure), Jordan's b., etc.; (2) from the liquid used; as, glycerin-b., water-b.; (3) from their mechanism; as, balance-b., pediment-b., siphon-b., wheel-b.; or (4) from their use; as, mountain-b. (for measuring altitudes).

3. Figuratively, any means of ascertaining or indicating changes, as of public opinion, morals, or character.

The dollar . . . is the finest barometer of social storms.
EMERSON Conduct of Life, Wealth p. 84. [o. & co. 1876.]

A. W. AND J. C. HARE Guesses at Truth p. 154. [MACM. 1889.]

[< Gr. baros, weight, + metron, measure.] — ba-rom'e-ter-flow"er, n. An artificial flower colored with cobaltous chlorid, which is blue in dry clear weather, but absorbs moisture from the air and becomes pink in damp or rainy weather. — b.-gage, n. A gage on the principle of the mercurial barometer, for determining degrees of vacuum, as in the receiver of an air-pump. — ba-rom'e-ter-mak"er's disease, a disease affecting the general system, characterized by mercurial poisoning from inhaling the fumes of mercury. — b.-paper, n. Paper saturated with a cobalt salt, which changes from blue to pink with varying atmospheric pressure. — cup b., the ordinary mercurial barometer: so called from the vessel in which the mercury is contained. See BAROMETER. cistern b.‡. — marine b., a barometer so hung as to remain upright in any position of the vessel on which it is placed, and having a narrow neck in the tube to prevent oscillations of the height from the pitching of the ship. — maximum b., a barometer showing the maximum pressure of the air since its latest adjustment. — normal b., a barometer constructed so that instrumental and accidental errors are corrected, the indications being inherently correct.

bar"o-met'ric, 1 bar'o-met'rık; 2 băr'o-mĕt'ric, a. Of, pertaining to, made with, or measured by a barometer; as, barometric conditions, observations, pressure, etc.

bar"o-met'ri-cal‡. — barometric balance, an instrument by which variations in atmospheric pressure acting upon aneroid boxes are made to move an index over a graduated arc. — b. column, the mercury or other column in the tube of a barometer. — b. error (Horol.), an error in the time of a clock due to atmospheric changes. — b. gradient (Meteor.), in atmospheric pressure, the rate of fall between two stations, expressed in England and America in hundredths of an inch of mercury for one degree, or occasionally a quarter of a degree, of 60 nautical miles. — b. maximum (Meteor.), an area furnishing a pressure-record markedly above that of environing areas; "a high." — b. minimum (Meteor.), an area furnishing a pressure-record markedly below that of environing areas; "a low." — b. pressure, atmospheric pressure. — b. rate (Meteor.), the speed with which barometric pressure increases or diminishes in a given time. — b. surge (Meteor.), a wide-spread change in the height of the barometer not due to the passage of a cyclonic or anticyclonic area. — b. tendency, the amount and direction of change in the barometric pressure during a specified number of hours preceding a stated time of observation. — bar"o-met'ri-cal-ly, adv.

bar"o-met'ro-graph, 1 bar'o-met'ro-graf; 2 băr'o-mĕt'ro-grăf, n. Same as BAROGRAPH. [< Gr. baros, weight, + metron, measure, + graphō, write.]

bar"o-me-trog'ra-phy, 1 bar'o-mı-treg'rə-fı; 2 băr'o-me-trŏg'ra-fy, n. The branch of meteorology that treats of the measurement of atmospheric pressure, as by the barometer.

ba-rom'e-try, 1 bə-rem'ı-trı; 2 ba-rŏm'e-try, n. The science, art, or practise of using the barometer or otherwise measuring the pressure of the air.

bar'o-metz, 1 bar'o-mets; 2 băr'o-mĕts, n. The woolly rootstalk of an Asiatic polypodiaceous fern (Dicksonia barometz); the Scythian or Tartarian lamb or Agnus scythicus. [Prob. < Rus. baranets, dim. of baran, ram.]

bar'o-mo"tor, 1 bar'o-mō'tər; 2 băr'o-mō'tor, n. A motor worked by means of a crank driven either by hand or by foot, or by both at once. [< Gr. baros, weight, + MOTOR.]

bar'on, 1 bar'ən; 2 băr'on, n. 1. [Gt. Brit.] A member of the lowest grade or order in the peerage, or the title he bears. The title was introduced into England by the Normans, and was used at first to designate one who held land by military or other honorable service, being applied to any one of the whole order of nobility. In later times the title had a more restricted meaning, in the reign of Henry III. becoming personal rather than territorial. Richard II. conferred the rank by letters patent; and this has since been the usual mode of conferring the dignity. Barons by prescription are those whose ancestors have sat in the Upper House from time immemorial. A baron of the United Kingdom has a seat and vote in the House of Lords. He is conventionally designated as "Lord ——"; has the title of "Right Honorable," and his children have that of "Honorable."

2. In continental Europe, a member of the lowest order of hereditary nobility. 3. [Rare.] A title of respect or honor applied to any man, and especially to the saints.

Look! look! behold the baron, for whom below
DANTE Divine Comedy tr. by Longfellow Paradise can. 35, st. 17.

4. [Colloq., U. S.] A capitalist who, either alone or in conjunction with others, controls the production or sale of any commodity.

GLADDEN Applied Christianity p. 18. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

[F., < LL. baro(n-), < OHG. baro, man; cp. AS. beorn, distinguished man, < beran, bear.] — baron and feme. 1. Law. The old term for husband and wife. 2. Her. The coats of arms of husband and wife borne per pale in the same escutcheon. — bar'on-court", n. See COURT-BARON. — b. of beef, a double sirloin not cut asunder.

Lord! how he laid about him, nothing but barons of beef and turkeys would go down with him. LAMB Last Essays of Elia, New Year's Coming of Age p. 374. [W. L. & CO.]

— barons of the Cinque Ports [Eng.], formerly, the representatives in the House of Commons from the seven (originally five) ports of Dover, Sandwich, Hythe, Romney, Hastings, Winchelsea, and Rye, together with their mayors and jurats. After the Reform Bill of 1832 the title was confined to the mayors and jurats, who have the right to bear the king's canopy at coronations. — Barons of the Exchequer [Eng.], the judges of the Court of Exchequer (abolished as a separate court in 1873): so called because they were anciently selected from the barons of the kingdom. — Barons' War, the two years' war (1262–1264) of the barons against Henry III., who had been compelled by Simon de Montfort, Earl of Leicester, to sign the provisions of Oxford in 1258. In the victory of the barons at Lewes (1264) de Montfort dictated terms to the king, resulting in the summoning to the Parliament of 1265 the knights of the shires and representatives of the boroughs — the antecedent of the present House of Commons. — great barons (Eng. Hist.), tenants of the crown who treated for payment of their relief and aids directly with the king and who were summoned by special writ. — lesser barons (Eng. Hist.), tenants of the crown who were summoned to court or military service by a general proclamation. — bar'on-ism, n. [Rare.] Rule by barons; feudalism. — bar'on-ist, n. [Rare.] Eng. Hist. A supporter of the barons in the contest with King John. — bar'on-ize, vt. To raise to the rank or dignity of a baron. — bar"on-nette', n. [F.] The daughter of a baron; sometimes, the wife of a baronet. [M.] — bar'on-ship, n. The dignity or rank of a baron.

bar'on-age, 1 bar'ən-ıj; 2 băr'on-ag, n. 1. The British order of barons; also, formerly, the whole peerage; the nobility.

GREEN Short Hist. Eng. People § 5, p. 221. [H. 1875.]

2. Baronship. 3. A book giving a list of barons. 4†. A barony. [< F. baronnage, < baron; see BARON.]

bar'on-ess, 1 bar'ən-es; 2 băr'on-ĕs, n. 1. The wife or widow of a baron. 2. A woman holding a barony in her own right.

bar'on-et, 1 bar'ən-et; 2 băr'on-ĕt vt. [Rare.] To give the rank and title of baronet; as, to baronet a knight.

bar'on-et, n. 1. [Gt. Brit.] An inheritable English title, created by letters patent and usually descendible to the male issue; also, the bearer of the title.

The order of baronets was instituted by James I. in 1611. In 1619 the Baronets of Ireland were instituted, and in 1625 Charles I. created the Baronets of Scotland and Nova Scotia. There have been no new creations of Scotch baronets since 1707, or of Irish baronets since 1800. All baronets are now of the United Kingdom. Baronets are commoners and rank next after the younger sons of barons. They prefix Sir to their full names and add the abbreviated title: as, Sir John Smith, Bart. Compare KNIGHT.

2†. A lesser baron; a gentleman not a baron by tenure: found as a title as early as the 14th century, and originally applied to those not barons by tenure summoned to the House of Lords by Edward III. [Dim. of BARON.]

bar'on-et-age, 1 bar'ən-et-ıj; 2 băr'on-ĕt-ag, n. 1. The rank or state of a baronet. 2. The order of baronets collectively. 3. A book containing a descriptive list of the order.

bar'on-et-cy, 1 bar'ən-et-sı; 2 băr'on-ĕt-çy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sız; 2 -çis, pl.] The patent or rank of a baronet. bar'on-et-hood‡; bar'on-et-ship‡.

ba-rong', 1 bə-reŋ'; 2 bă-rŏng', n. [P. I.] A cutlass or cleaver-like weapon used chiefly by the Moros of Mindanao and the Sulu archipelago. Compare BOLO, 2. See illus. under MORO.

ba-ro'ni-al, 1 bə-rō'nı-əl; 2 ba-rō'ni-al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a baron, a barony, or the order of barons; as, baronial estates.

In their baronial feuds and single fields,
What deeds of prowess unrecorded died!
BYRON Childe Harold can. 3, st. 49.

2. Com. Denoting sizes and shapes of envelop first used by the nobility.

Ba-ro'ni-us, 1 bə-rō'nı-us; 2 ba-rō'ni-ŭs, Cæsar (10/31 1538–6/31 1607). An Italian cardinal and ecclesiastical historian; Annales Ecclesiastici.

But by the royal customs of our realm
The Church should hold her baronies of me.
TENNYSON Becket prol., l. 16.

2. [Scot.] Any large freehold estate, even tho held by a commoner. 3. [Ir.] A county division. 4. The tenure by which a baron held his lands, by attending the king in his courts. 5†. All barons collectively. [< OF. baronie, < LL. baronia, < baro(n-), man; see BARON.]

ba-roque', 1 bə-rōk'; 2 ba-rōk'. [F.] I. a. 1. Irregularly shaped; fantastic in style; grotesque; specif., denoting a style of architecture and decoration common in the first half of the 18th century; rococo. 2. Mus. Designating a type of composition marked by extreme and fantastic harmonies.

II. n. 1. An object, ornament, or design in baroque style. 2. Mus. A composition written in baroque type.

bar'o-scope, 1 bar'o-skōp; 2 băr'o-scōp, n. 1. An instrument for approximately indicating atmospheric pressure; a weather-glass. 2. Physics. A device indicating the loss in weight of objects in air. [< Gr. baros, weight, + skopeō, view.] — bar"o-scop'ic, bar"o-scop'i-cal, a.

bar"o-sel'e-nite, 1 bar'o-sel'ı-nait; 2 băr'o-sĕl'e-nit, n. Same as BARITE.

Ba-ros'ma, 1 bə-res'mə; 2 ba-rŏs'ma, n. Bot. A genus of evergreen South-African shrubs of the rue family, of oppressive odor. The dried leaves of some species furnish buchu. [< Gr. barysosmos, of unpleasant smell, < barys, heavy, + osmē, smell, < ozō, smell.] — ba-ros'ma-cam"phor, n. A slightly aromatic crystalline compound ($C_{18}H_{16}O_2$), contained in the oil from buchu-leaves; diosphenol.

ba-ros'min, 1 bə-res'mın; 2 ba-rŏs'min, n. Chem. A brown aromatic powder derived from the leaves of a species of Barosma, and having an acrid taste: used as an antiseptic and diuretic.

Ba"ro-tac' Nu-e'vo, 1 bă"ro-tăk' nū-ē'vo; 2 bă'ro-tăc' nu-e'vo. A town in Iloilo province, Panay, P. I.

Ba"ro-tac' Vi-e'jo, 1 bă"ro-tăk' vi-ē'ho; 2 bă'ro-tăc' vi-e'ho. A town in Iloilo province, Panay, P. I.

bar"o-tax'is, 1 bar'o-taks'ıs; 2 băr'o-tăks'is, n. Physiol. Stimulation due to change of pressure. [< Gr. baros, weight, + taxis, order.]

bar"o-ther'mo-graph, 1 bar'o-thūr'mo-graf; 2 băr'o-thĕr'mo-grăf, n. An instrument consisting of a barograph combined with a thermograph used for recording pressure and temperature simultaneously. [< Gr. baros, weight, + thermos, heat, + graphō, write.] bar"o-ther-mom'e-ter‡.

ba-ro'to, 1 ba-rō'to; 2 bă-rō'to, n. [P. I.] A native boat or dugout, used by the inhabitants of Cebú and other islands.

ba-rouche', 1 bə-rūsh'; 2 ba-ruch', n. A four-wheeled low-bodied pleasure-vehicle with falling or folding top, having two inside seats facing each other and an upper outside seat for the driver. [< G. barutsche, < It. baroccio, < LL. birotus, two-wheeled, < L. bis (see BI-) + rota, wheel.] [barouche or similar vehicle.

ba"rou-chet', 1 ba"rū-shē'; 2 bă"ru-çhe', n. A small light

bar'-point", 1 bär'-peint"; 2 bär'-point', n. In backgammon, the point nearest the bar on a player's outer table.

barque, n. Same as BARK².

Bar-qui"si-me'to, 1 bar-kı'sı-mē'to; 2 bär-kī'sı-me'to, n. A city, capital of Lara, Venezuela.

barr, 1 bär; 2 bär, vi. To utter the cry of an elephant. [< F. barrir, < L. barrire.]

Bar'ra, 1 bär'ə; 2 bär'a, n. 1. An island in Inverness-shire, Scotland. 2. A suburb of Naples, Italy.

bar-rab'kie, 1 bə-rab'kı; 2 bu-răb'ki, n. [Alaska.] An Eskimo hut built of sods with a dirt roof. [barred.

bar'ra-bl(e", 1 bär'ə-bl; 2 bär'a-bl, a. Law. That may be bar'ra-can, 1 bar'ə-kan; 2 băr'a-căn, n. 1. A thick waterproof fabric of wool, or of wool and silk or cotton: originally of camels' hair: used in the Levant; also, a variety of camlet made in France and Spain. 2. A garment, as a cape, of this fabric. [F., < Turk. barrakan, < Ar. barrakān, < Per. barak, stuff made of camels' hair.]

bar'race, 1 bar'əs; 2 băr'as, n. 1. [Dial. or Obs.] An enclosure for knightly encounters. 2†. Contention. 3†. Barrier.

bar'rack, 1 bar'ək; 2 băr'ak, v. I. t. To provide with or establish in barracks.

II. i. 1. To live in barracks. 2. [Local, Eng. & Austral.] To encourage one party, or oppose the other, with boisterous cheering, as at a game; "root." Compare ROOT², v. — to barrack for, to support noisily; clamor for. — bar'rack-er, n.

bar'rack, n. 1. A permanent structure for the lodgment of soldiers, as distinguished from a hut or tent: generally in the plural.

Barracks of logs, that answered the double purpose of dwellings and fortifications. COOPER Pathfinder p. 110. [H. M. & CO.]

2. A temporary or rough building or a number of huts in an enclosure, serving as a shelter for a company of laborers or the like. 3. A light adjustable roof supported at the corners by four posts, for sheltering hay, etc.; also, a barn for such storage. [< F. baragne, < It. baracca, soldier's tent, < LL. barra, bar.] bar-raquet'.— bar'rack-mas"ter, n. The superintendent of soldiers' barracks.— B. smack, a Berwick smack or fishing-vessel.

A Hay-barrack.

Bar"rack-pur', 1 bar'ak-pûr'; 2 bär'ak-pûr', n. A town and military post in Bengal, British India.

bar'ra-clade, 1 bar'ə-klēd; 2 bär'a-clād, n. A napless home-made blanketing: first used by the early Dutch of New York. [< D. baare (= E. BARE, a.) + kleed, = E. CLOTH.]

bar"ra-coon', 1 bar'ə-kūn'; 2 bär"a-cōōn', n. A barrack or enclosure, originally on the African coast, for the cooping of captured negroes to be shipped and sold into slavery, but later for the detention of convicts, etc.; a slave-pen or slave-depot. [< Sp. barracón, augmentative of barraca, barrack, < LL. barra, bar.]

And this one says . . . he has not heard a word from his home in six months, while he has been locked up in an infernal barracoon.
E. E. HALE Man Without a Country p. 227. [T. & F. 1868.]

bar"ra-cu'da, 1 bar'ə-kū'də; 2 bär'a-cu'da, n. 1. [W. Ind.] A voracious pike-like sphyrænoid fish, usually of tropical seas, as the becuna or Sphyræna picuda of the West Indies, sometimes 10 feet in length. 2. [Austral.] An edible gempyloid fish (Thyrsites atun). bar"ra-coo'ta.— long barracuda, same as PELON.

bar'rad, 1 bar'ad; 2 bär'ăd, n. A tall conical cap formerly worn by the Irish. [< Ir. bairead, < BARRET.] bar'rald.

bar'ra-gan, 1 bar'ə-gən; 2 bär'a-gan, n. Same as BARGAN.

bar'ra-gan, n. Same as BARRACAN. bar'ra-gon or -kan.

bar'rage, 1 bär'ij; 2 bär'ăj, n. 1. The act of barring; especially, the formation of an artificial bar in one part of a watercourse, to cause or maintain increased depth in other parts, to aid in irrigation, etc.; also, the bar thus constructed. 2. In stringed instruments of the mandolin or guitar type, the raising of the pitch of the instrument by placing a finger of the left hand over one or more strings so as to shorten them. A grand or great barrage is a shortening of all the strings at once; a little b. is a shortening of only a part of the strings. 3. [Recent.] 1 bar'rōzh'; bär'räzh'. Mil. A concentrated fire on a sector of an enemy's line. Pronunciation not yet Anglicized. Barrages are (1) box, when directed against an enemy trench, as before an advance; (2) creeping, when moving forward at a set speed and sweeping the ground to be occupied, and (3) jumping, when directed on one line, as a front-line trench, it jumps to another or second-line trench. Compare CURTAIN OF FIRE. [F., barrier, < barrer: see BAR, v.]— drum'-bar"rage, n. A movable dam consisting of a circular drum that revolves on an axis set in masonry and acts as a check to the outflow.

bar"ra-mun'da, 1 bar'ə-mun'də; 2 bär'a-mŭn'da, n. [Austral.] 1. A large dipnoan mudfish (Neoceratodus forsteri) of Australia. 2. An Australian fish with large scales, as Osteoglossum or Scleropages leichardti.

bar-ran'ca, 1 bə-ran'kə; 2 ba-răn'ca, n. [Sp. or Sp.-Am.] A deep ravine or gorge with steep sides; generally, a cutting made by torrents. bar-ran'co.

bar-ran'dite, 1 ba-ran'dīt; 2 bä-răn'dīt, n. Mineral. A bluish, reddish, greenish, or yellow-gray hydrous ferric aluminum phosphate, $(Al,Fe)PO_4+2H_2O$, found in spheroidal concretions. [< Barrande, Fr. geologist (1797–1883).]

Bar"ran-quil'la, 1 bär'an-kēl'ya; 2 bär"ăn-kēl'yä, n. A town, capital of Atlantico department, Colombia.

[< OF. barriere, < LL. barra, bar.]

SYN.: bar, barricade, bulwark, hindrance, obstacle, obstruction, parapet, prohibition, rampart, restraint, restriction. A bar is something that is or may be firmly fixed, ordinarily with intent to prevent entrance or egress; as, the bars of a prison cell; the bars of a wood-lot. A barrier obstructs, but is not necessarily impassable. Barrier is used of objects more extensive than those to which bar is applied. A mountain range may be a barrier to exploration; but a mass of sand across the entrance to a harbor is called a bar. Discovered falsehood is a bar to confidence. Barricade has become practically a technical name for an improvised street fortification, and, unless in some way modified, is usually so understood. A parapet is a low or breast-high wall, as about the edge of a roof, terrace, etc., especially, in military use, such a wall for the protection of troops; a rampart is the embankment surrounding a fort, on which the parapet is raised; the word rampart is often used as including the parapet. Bulwark is a general word for any defensive wall or rampart; its only technical use at present is in nautical language, where it signifies the raised side of a ship above the upper deck, topped by the rail. See BOUNDARY; IMPEDIMENT.— ANT.: admittance, entrance, opening, passage, road, thoroughfare, way.— PREP.: a barrier to progress, against invasion; a barrier between nations.

Syn.: abject, cheap, corrupt, debased, debasing, degraded, degrading, dishonorable, groveling, ignoble, infamous, low, mean, shameful, sordid, vile, worthless. See BAD; BRUTISH; PITIFUL.— Ant.: esteemed, exalted, honorable, honored, lofty, noble, pure, refined, worthy.— base animals, animals which, even if domesticated and tamed, it was not larceny at common law to steal, as dogs, cats, bears, etc. They become subject to larceny by statute. Compare FERÆ NATURÆ.— base'-court", n. 1. The outer court of a castle or mansion, occupied by the servants; also, the rear court of a farmhouse, containing the outbuildings. 2. Feudal Law. An inferior court of record.— b. fee, an estate or fee with a qualification, formerly held at the will of the lord. — b. tenure, originally, tenure of lands founded on servile offices, from which has sprung the tenure of copyhold.

base, n. 1. The lowest or supporting part; that portion of an object on which the remainder rests, or which forms the larger or more important part to which less important parts attach or belong; the foundation.

Come one, come all! this rock shall fly
From its firm base as soon as I.
SCOTT Lady of the Lake can. 5, st. 10.

(1) Arch. The lowest member of a structure, as the basement of a building, the plinth (when present) and base-moldings of a column, or the lowest course of a wall; a pedestal. (2) Carp. A board skirting the wall of a room, next the floor; base-board. (3) Btol. The end opposite to the apex; the point of attachment. (4) Petrol. The ground-mass or magma of a rock. (5) Crystal. The basal or pinacoid plane. (6) Her. The lower part of the shield, the charges on which are said to be in base. (7) Dentistry. A foundation, next the gum, for artificial teeth. (8) Mus. (a) The foundation or lowest part in a musical composition; that part upon which harmonies are founded. (b) Same as BASS[2]. (9) Gr. Pros. An introductory foot of two syllables in a lyric verse. KÜHNER Gr. Gram. § 352.

2. A determining ingredient; a common element with which other more distinctive elements unite to form a product. (1) Chem. A chemical compound which is capable of so uniting with an acid as in whole or in part to displace its hydrogen, neutralize its acid properties, and so form a salt: especially, in physiological chemistry, a ptomain. Many of these alkaloids are named after their discoverers, as Brieger's bases (one of which is obtained from the typhoid bacillus), Morin's base (produced in fusel-oil), etc. (2) Pharm. That ingredient in a preparation which contains the essential principle; as, the base of an ointment. (3) A substance used as a mordant, by which colors are set or fixed.

3. Any point, part, line, number, or quantity from which a reckoning, inference, or conclusion proceeds, or on which any other dimension, or the like, depends; any principle or datum; a basis; as, the base of an argument; the base of a triangle. (1) Surv. A very accurately measured line on the earth's surface, from whose known length other lines in a survey are determined: hence called a base-line. (2) In logarithms, a number the indices of whose powers are the logarithms of those powers respectively, as 10 in the common or Briggs system, and 2.71828 in the Naperian system. (3) Arith. A number on which a mathematical system or calculation depends; as, in the Arabic notation, 10 is the base of the decimal system. (4) Geom. That side of a rectilineal figure or that face of a solid on which the figure is conceived to be erected; a side or face which has some special mark or character, or to which other parts are referred. (5) Fort. (a) The imaginary line between two salient angles. (b) The exterior of the polygon.

4. Sports. (1) In baseball, one of the four points, or the stone or bag marking it, at the four angles of the diamond. See BASEBALL. (2) The line or limit serving as a goal or starting-point in a race. (3) In some games, as hockey, a line across which a player endeavors to strike his ball. 5. Ordnance. (1) The rounded rear part of a cannon, between the knob and the ring when these members exist. base of the breech†. (2) An old form of boat-gun. (3) A musketoon-like wall-piece of the 15th and 16th centuries, carrying a five-ounce ball. 6. Mil. (1) A place or region constituting a basis of operations or a point from which supplies and reenforcements may be drawn; as, a base of supply. (2) A unit (whether single soldier, troop, battery, or squadron) on which the evolutions hinge, and whose line of march is unaffected by the movements of other bodies. [F., < L. basis, < Gr. basis, stepping, base, < bainō, go.] baast.

Syn.: see BOTTOM; FOUNDATION.

— base'-bag", n. In baseball, a bag, usually of sand, forming one of the three bases other than the home base.— b.-board, n. Same as BASE, 1 (2).— b.-burner, n. A coal-stove or furnace in which the fuel is contained in a central chamber with a closed top and open bottom, at which latter place it is burned.— b.-course, n. 1. The lowest or foundation course of a wall. 2. A course between the foundation-wall and the wall proper.— b.-hit, n. In baseball, a hit that enables the batsman to reach first base before the ball can be thrown there.— b.-line, n. 1. The line connecting two bases. See BASEBALL and BASE, 4 (1). 2. The end boundary-line of a tennis-court. 3. A base-ring. — b.-molding, n. A molding at the base of any structure or member.— b. on balls (Baseball), the advancement of the batsman to first base through the delivery to him of a specified number of unfair balls, at present four.— b.-plate, n. See PLATE.— b.-ring, n. A ring on the breech of a cannon dividing the base from the first reenforcing ring.— b.-rocker, n. A chair rocking upon a curved-top base to which it is attached, and which is usually supplied with casters.— b.-runner, n. A baseball-player running or about to run between bases.— Newtonian b., a theoretical fixed point in space to which absolute motion might be referred.

base'ball", n. A game played with bat and ball, named from the four bases or bounds which mark the course each runner must take; also, the ball used in the game: called the "national game of the United States."

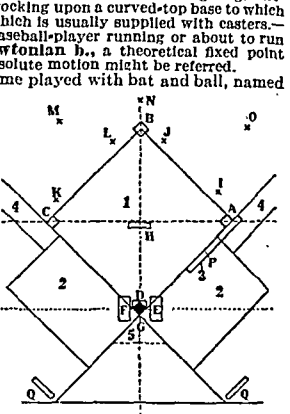

Diagram of a Baseball Field.
1. Diamond (90 feet x 90 feet). 2. Players' lines (75 feet x 50 feet). 3. Three-foot line (48 feet x 3 feet). 4. Coachers' lines. 5. Catcher's lines. A, first base (15 inches x 15 inches); B, second base (15 inches x 15 inches); C, third base (15 inches x 15 inches); D, home-plate (17 inches x 17 inches; 8½ inches); E, F, batters' boxes; G, catcher; H, pitcher's plate (24 inches x 6 inches); K, second-baseman; L, third-baseman; M, N, O, outfielders; P, space at rear of the bat, to which base-runner must confine himself; Q, Q, players' benches.

The players are divided into two sides, generally of nine each, one being at the bat and the other in the field, alternately. Each player of the former, in his turn, tries to bat the ball (thrown by one of the opposing side, the pitcher) in such manner that the batsman can reach one of the bases before the ball can be thrown there, or before he can be touched with it. In all cases the circuit must be made in regular order. He then tries in like manner, while succeeding players on his side are at the bat, to reach the next base, Q, Q, players' benches, and so to make the circuit. He is out if the ball, when he strikes it, is caught by an opponent before it bounds, or if he misses the ball thrice and it is then caught by the player behind him (the catcher), and also in certain other contingencies. When three players on a side are out the sides change places, and when each side has had its turn at the bat an inning is concluded. Nine innings usually constitute a game. The side that has scored the greater number of runs wins the game.

Some of the terms used in the game are the following. Those not self-explanatory are defined in their appropriate places.

Bas-sa′li-a, 1 ba-sē′li-ə; 2 bä-sä′li-a, n. Zoogeog. The realm of deep-sea life, which in warm latitudes sinks far below, and near the poles approaches the surface. A few of the animals of this abyssal realm are blind, but most have eyes, sometimes greatly exceeding normal proportions. Phosphorescent organs are borne by most, and the light from these perhaps accounts for the colors which ornament many Bassalian creatures, altho they dwell far beneath the effect of sunlight. This phosphorescence seems serviceable as a means of searching for prey, since all these animals are necessarily carnivorous, and also as a defense. Adapted to the great pressure of their depth-zone, when brought to the surface abyssal animals are invariably killed and often disrupted by the expansion of the gases in their bodies. [< LL. bassus, low, + Gr. halia, assembly.]—Bas-sa′li-an, a.

Ba"tha-la', 1 bā'tə-lā'; 2 bā'tä-lä', n. [P. I.] The Supreme Being in ancient Tagalog mythology: among Christianized Filipinos, the infant Jesus. [< Old Tag. bat, man, + ha, Deity or Power, + la or lat, woman.]

Bathala, or Bathola Maycapal, in the Tagalog, is the Creator or oldest of all the gods. There seems to be doubt among the natives as to his 'birth,' and some declare him to have come from a far-away country and made the lesser deities to serve him, and then man to serve them. The name indicates his functions—Bat = man, ha = Power or divinity, and la or lat = woman; hence, man and woman, divinely joined. 'Taon,' his Visayan name, indicates antiquity, and Mohana, the name given him by the Negritos, indicates a slight shade of difference in meaning.

Her.* A cross potent.— bā"tons'·rom"pus', 1 ba"tôn'·rôn"pü'; 2 bā"tôn'·rôn"pü', n. pl. [F.] Literally, broken sticks; specif., (Arch.), cylindrical ornaments in a billet-molding.— baton sinister (Her.), a bendlet sinister as a mark of bastardy: erroneously barsinister.

bat'oned, 1 bat'ənd; 2 băt'ond, a. 1. Bearing a baton.

bat'ond[a], ∫ 2. Her. Marked with the baton of bastardy.

Ba-to'nı, 1 bə-tō'nı; 2 bä-tō'nı, Pompeo Girolamo (1708–1787). An Italian painter; Penitent Magdalene, etc.

bat'on-net, 1 bat'n-et; 2 băt'n-ĕt, n. [F.] An ink- and crayon-eraser, shaped like a tipcat.

Bat'on Rouge, 1 bat'ən rūj; 2 băt'on rụzh. A city, capital of Louisiana and of East Baton Rouge Parish; cotton port; Louisiana State University (non-sectarian), founded in 1860.

ba-toon', 1 bə-tūn'; 2 ba-tōōn', n. 1. [Archaic.] A baton. 2. Her. See BATON. 3. Arch. A torus.

bat"o-pho'bı-a, 1 bat'o-fō'bı-ə; 2 băt'o-fō'bi-a, n. Pathol. Dread of passing high objects or being on high places. [< Gr. batos, passable, + -PHOBIA.]

ba-to"re-om'e-ter, 1 bə-tō"rı-em'ı-tər, 2 ba-tō"re-ŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring by a screw and electrical contact minute differences in thickness.

Ba-toum', 1 bə-tūm'; 2 bä-tụm', n. Same as BATUM.

ba-tourde', 1 bə-tūrd'; 2 bä-tụrd', n. [F.] A spring-board used by tumblers and acrobats. Compare BATULE.

With the batourde . . . men have turned double somersaults over twenty-four bayonets, and in 1889 at the gymnasium of Du Marsais in Paris M. Mars turned a triple somersault.
The Sun New York, Feb. 23.'10, p. 6, col. 4.

bat'·par"ra-keet, etc. See BAT, n.

Ba-tra'chi-a, 1 bə-trē'kı-ə; 2 ba-trā'ci-a, n. pl. Herp. A group of reptiles variously ranked and limited, including the frogs and toads. (1) A class, the Amphibia. (2) The Amphibia as an order. (3) An order, the Anura or Salientia. [< Gr. batracheia (batracheios), < batrachos, frog.]

Skull, etc., of a Batrachian (Amphiuma means), showing characteristics of the group.

1. Skull, from beneath. 2. Skull and hyoid apparatus, from the side. 3. Shoulder-girdle and arm. 4. Pelvis and hind leg. b. br, basibranchial; b. hy, basihyal; c. br, ceratobranchial; c. hy, ceratohyal; cor, coracoid; d, dentary; e. br, epibranchials; f, frontoparietal; fe, femur; fi, fibulare; h, humerus; il, ilium; is, ischium; mx, maxillary; n, nasal; oc. c, occipital condyle; p. parietal; pef, prefrontal; pm, premaxillary; pro. o, prootic; pt, pterygoid; q, quadrate; r, radius; u, ulna; sc, scapula; sc', suprascapula; sq, squamosal; st, stapes; v. pal, vomeropalatine; t, tibia.

ba-tra'chi-an, 1 bə-trē'kı-ən; 2 ba-trā'ci-an, a. Of or pertaining to the Batrachia, especially the frogs.

Old croakers, deacons of the mire,
That led the deep batrachian choir.
LOWELL Biglow Papers second series, iv, st. 3.

ba-tra'chi-an, n. One of the Batrachia.

Ba-trach'ı-dæ, 1 bə-trak'ı-dī; 2 ba-trăc'ı-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of acanthopterygians with an anterior dorsal of 2 or 3 pungent spines, a long posterior dorsal, and pedunculate pectorals, including the true toadfishes. Bat'ra-chus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. batrachos, frog.] — bat'ra-chid, n.

bat'ra-chite, 1 bat'rə-kait; 2 băt'ra-cit, n. A fossil colored like a frog; toadstone.

bat'ra-cho-, 1 bat'rə-ko-; 2 băt'ra-co-. From Greek batrachos, frog: a combining form.— bat'ra-choid, a. 1. Frog-like. 2. Of or pertaining to the Batrachidæ.— Bat"ra-choi'de-a, n. pl. Ich. A superfamily of acanthopterygians, including the Batrachidæ.— bat"ra-choi'de-an, a. & n.— Bat"ra-choi'dı-dæ, n. pl. The Batrachidæ. Bat"ra-choi'des, n. (t. g.).— ba"tra-choi'dı-did, a. & n.— ba"tra-choi'dı-doid, a. & n.— ba-trach'o-lite, n. A fossil of or resembling a batrachian: a term now obsolescent.— Bat"ra-cho-my-om'a-chy, n. The battle between the frogs and the mice: an ancient parody on the Iliad, long attributed to Homer. Bat"ra-cho-my-om"a-chi'a‡.— bat"ra-chophi'a-gous, a. Frog-eating; living on frogs.— Bat"ra-cho-phidi'ı-a, n. pl. Herp. An order of amphibians, with a snake-like form, including the Cæcilidæ. Bat"ra-cho-phidi'ı-an, a. & n.— bat"ra-cho-phi'bı-a, n. [Rare.] Fear of, or morbid aversion to, frogs or other batrachians.— Bat"ra-chop'sı-da, n. pl. Zool. A superclass of vertebrates, composed of the amphibians.— Bat"ra-cho-sper'me-æ, n. pl. Bot. An order or group of small floriferous fresh-water algæ with moniliform branches.— Bat"ra-cho-sper'mum, n. Bot. A small genus of Batrachospermeæ.— bat"ra-chos'to-mous, a. Having a frog-like mouth, as certain goatsuckers.

bats, 1 bats; 2 băts, n. pl. 1. Formerly low-cut laced shoes for women's wear. 2. [Colloq.] (1) Boots in bad repair. (2) Bad humor or condition. 3. [Scot.] Colic. 4. [Scot. & Prov. Eng.] Farriery. Warbles. batts‡.

Bat"shi-an', 1 bät'shi-ūn'; 2 bät'shi-ĭn', n. See BATJAN.

bats'man, 1 bats'mən; 2 băts'man, n. [-MEN, pl.] One who handles the bat, as in baseball, etc. bat'ster‡; bat'ter‡.— batsman's box (Baseball), the rectangular space by the home plate in which the batsman must stand when batting. See BASEBALL.

bats'wing", 1 bats'wiŋ"; 2 băts'wing", n. [Eng.] A coarse gray felt-like cloth woven without seam and used for underskirts. [< BAT[2], n., + WING.] — batswing coral, same as HIELAMAN, n., 2.

batt[1], 1 bat: 2 băt, n. [Eng.] A stone platform or apron on which seines are drawn up.

batt[2], n. 1. Same as BAT[1], n. 2. Same as BATTING, n.

bat'ta[1], 1 bat'ə; 2 băt'a, n. [Anglo-Ind.] 1. Money for maintenance, as for servants while traveling, prisoners, witnesses, etc. 2. Extra pay; extra allowance, as to army officers, soldiers, or public servants.

He would rather live upon half-pay, in a garrison that could boast of a five-court, than vegetate on full batta, where there was none. G. R. GLEIG Thomas Munro vol. i, p. 227. [H. c. 1830.]

bat'ta[2], n. Rate or difference of exchange; discount; agio; deficiency. [Hind.]

bat'ta-ble†, a. 1. Fertile; fattening. 2. Malleable.

bat"tage', 1 ba"täzh'; 2 bă"tăzh', n. [F.] 1. The act of beating or threshing. 2. The process of compounding by beating with a pestle, as formerly in making gunpowder. ba"tage'‡.

bat'tail-ant†, a. & n. Combatant.

bat'talle†, n. Same as BATTLE[1], n. [warlike.

bat'tal-lous, 1 bat'ı-lus; 2 băt'a-lŭs, a. [Archaic.] Bellicose;

Bat'taks, 1 bä'taks; 2 bä'täks, n. pl. [P. I.] 1. A tribe living in the northern mountain region of Palawan. 2. sing. A member of a partly civilized tribe of Sumatra; also, the vernacular spoken by them.

bat-ta'll-a, 1 ba-tä'lı-ə; 2 bä-tä'll-a, n. [Archaic.] 1. A body of soldiers on the march; an army, especially the main part.

Their barbed horsemen, in the rear,
The stern battalia crown'd.
SCOTT Lady of the Lake can. 6, st. 15.

2. Order of battle.

bat-ta'll-a ple. [Eng.] A dish, concocted for special occasions, consisting of rabbits, pigeons, and chickens, seasoned with spices, cocks' combs, and savory balls, and mixed with a rich sauce of claret, anchovy, and sweet herbs.

bat-tal'lon, 1 bat-tal'yən; 2 bă-tăl'yon, vt. [Rare.] To array in battalions.— bat-tal'loned, a.

bat-tal'lon, n. 1. A body of infantry composed of two or more companies, forming a part of a regiment; also, a unit consisting of two or more companies of engineers or other unmounted troops or of several artillery batteries forming a single command, or, in some countries, of two to seven companies of cavalry.

A battalion in the United States and the British armies embraces four companies, in the British army (1914–18) each of 250 men; in other European armies generally four companies, each with a strength varying from 120 to 400 men.

A single battalion of four companies, with a field-officer, will compose a good body for a garrison.
W. T. SHERMAN Memoirs vol. ii, p. 384. [A. 1875.]

2. A body of troops; a part, formerly the whole, of a regiment in action or on parade. 3†. An army drawn up for battle. [< F. bataillon, < It. battaglione, < battaglia, < LL. battalia; see BATTLE[1], n.] bat-tal'on†.

Bat"tam-bang', 1 bä"tam-bäŋ'; 2 bä"tăm-băng', n. A city in the N. W. part of Cambodia, French Indo-China; formerly Siam.

bat-teau', n. Same as BATEAU.

bat'telt, n. Same as BATTLE[1], n.

bat'tels, 1 bat'ız; 2 băt'ĭs, n. pl. [Eng.] 1. At Oxford University, a student's buttery account; also, the entire charges for board, tuition, etc. 2. At Eton College, a small allowance of food received by collegers from their dames in addition to that from the college. [< bat- (see BATTEN[1], v.) + -tel = DEAL[1], n.] — bat'tel, vi. [Eng.] 1. To have an account with the buttery at Oxford University. 2†. To put into a common fund or stock.— bat'tel-er†, n. A student who battels in college: formerly, a grade at Oxford below commoner. bat'tel-ler‡; bat'tler‡.

batte'ment, 1 bat'mənt or (F.) bat'mäṅ'; 2 băt'ment or (F.) bät'mäṅ', n. [F.] 1. An impulse; throb; stroke. 2. Mus. A slow trill or quaver in singing.

bat'ten[1], 1 bat'n; 2 băt'n, v. I. t. 1. To make fat; feed high. 2†. To enrich; fertilize, as land. II. i. 1. To grow fat or thrive, as on rich and abundant food; as, sheep will batten on such pasturage. 2. To prosper, or grow rich, especially at another's expense.

A system under which so many friars battened in luxury upon the toil of others. MOTLEY Dutch Republic vol. i, p. 257. [H. 1862.]

3. To gratify a morbid craving; gloat. [< Ice. batna, grow better, improve, < Germanic bat-; see BEST.]

bat'ten[2], vt. To make, furnish, or fasten with battens.

— to batten down the hatches (Naut.), to put tarpaulins over a hatchway and secure them by strips of wood along their edges.

In heavy weather it was intended that her [the Monitor's] hatches and all her openings should be closed and battened down. CHITTENDEN Recollections of Lincoln p. 228. [H. 1891.]

bat'ten[3], n. 1. A narrow strip of wood; scantling. (1) One of a series of cleats fastened across parallel boards to secure them, as in a door; also, a cleat secured to a brick wall before lathing and plastering; furring; also, a strip nailed on lengthwise to stop a crack. (2) Naut. A strip used (a) in securing tarpaulins over hatches, (b) to protect a mast or spar from chafing, or (c) to sling a hammock from. 2. Squared timber about 7 inches broad, from 1 to 4 inches thick, and 6 feet or more in length. 3. Weaving. The swinging beam which beats up the weft; a lay or lathe. [For BATON.]

— batten door, shutters, etc., a door, etc., of boards held together by cross-battens.

C. E. CRADDOCK in Harper's Monthly Jan., 1891, p. 218. [A.]

— b. end, a board not exceeding 7 inches wide or 4 inches thick, and less than 6 feet long, as for roofing, flooring, etc.— b. floor, a floor of narrow boards.

bat'ten[2], 1 bat'ən; 2 băt'en, n. [Prov. Eng.] A bundle of straw, generally composed of two or more sheaves.

bat'tend, pp. Battened. S. S.

bat'ten-ing, 1 bat'n-ıŋ; 2 băt'n-ing, n. 1. Battens in the aggregate. 2. The putting on of battens.

bat'ter[1], 1 bat'ər; 2 băt'er, v. I. t. 1. To beat upon with repeated blows, usually to effect a breach; as, to batter the city walls with artillery: often with down. 2. To dent, mar, or deface with or as with repeated blows; as, the old hat had been well battered. 3. In forging, to spread (the end of a piece of metal) by hammering; upset.

II. i. To pound or beat with blow after blow.

He batter'd at the doors; none came. TENNYSON Princess v, st. 11.
[< F. battre, < LL. batto, < L. battuo, beat.] SYN.: see BEAT.

— bat'ter-fang", vt. [Dial. or Obs.] To assail with fists and nails; batter.— b. head, n. That head of a drum which is beaten.— bat'ter-ing-charge", n. The heaviest charge for a siege-gun, used in battering.— batter-ing-gun or -piece, n. See GUN.— battering-ram, n. 1. A long beam, usually with a heavy head, anciently used in forcing gates and making breaches in walls: either carried bodily by the assailants or suspended from a frame and swung to and fro. 2. A heavy hammer slung and propelled horizontally: used in blacksmithing.— battering-train, n. A train of siege-guns.

An Ancient Battering-ram.

bat'ter[2], vi. To slope back from the base, as a wall.

bat'ter[3], vt. [Scot.] To paste on or together; cover.

When I awoke, I found myself lying in a dungeon vault of the castle of Brae-mar, . . . and all over battered with blood. HOGG Tales and Sketches, Old Soldier's Tale in vol. iii, p. 170. [B. s. 1837.]

bat'ter[1], n. 1. A thick semiliquid mixture of two or more materials beaten together, to be used in cookery; as, a batter of eggs, flour, and milk; batter cakes. 2. [Scot.] Flour paste, especially that used in sizing cloth. [< OF. bature, beating, < batre (F. battre); see BATTER[1], v.] — batter bread [Local, U. S.], bread of cornmeal and lard or butter, mixed soft enough to be served with a spoon.

bat'ter[2], n. 1. A heavy blow; also, repeated blows; blows collectively, or the condition resulting from them.

Original vigor was still visible under all the rust and batter of seventy years. BAYARD TAYLOR At Home and Abroad vol. i, p. 16. [G. P. P. 1860.]

2. Ceram. A mallet for beating a lump of plastic clay flat upon the bedding-block before it is sent to the whirling-table. 3. Print. A breakage or marring of type or a plate so that it prints imperfectly.

bat'ter[4], n. Engin. & Arch. Backward and upward slope of a wall or bank, as of a canal or a railroad bed, giving resistance to thrust, or firmer base.— bat'ter-board", n. One of two boards fastened horizontally to guide-posts set so as to abut on the corners of an excavation for the foundation of a building to help the builders in establishing a level from which lines are stretched out to indicate the plan.— b.-brace, n. A sloping brace to support the end of a truss.— b.-level, n. An instrument for measuring inclination from the vertical.— b.-rule, n. An instrument by which the slope of a wall may be measured or regulated. bat'ter-ing-rule"‡.

bat'ter-dock", 1 bat'er-dek"; 2 băt'er-dŏk", n. 1. The sweet coltsfoot (Petasites petasites). 2. The broad-leaved floating pondweed (Potamogeton natans). [For BUTTERDOCK.]

bat-te'rı-at, n. Same as BATTERY, 8.

bat"te-rie', 1 ba"tə-rī'; 2 bă"te-rē', n. [F.] 1. A roll beaten on a snare-drum. 2. A method of guitar-playing in which the strings are struck instead of plucked. 3†. Staccato arpeggiation.

bat'ter-y, 1 bat'ər-ı; 2 băt'er-y, n. [-IES, 1 -ız; 2 -ĭz, pl.] 1. Mil. (1) An earthwork or parapet for the protection of one or more guns used in attack or defense, together with the guns so protected: broadly distinguished from a fort by not being completely inclosed. (2) Two or more pieces of artillery (in England and the United States generally four to six) constituting a tactical unit in the field. (3) A company of artillerymen, or the guns and other equipments of such a company; also, the personnel and material together; as, a field-battery; Battery A. (4) The armament of a vessel of war, or a special part thereof; as, the starboard battery. (5) The position when the order to fire is awaited.

Some military batteries are named (1) from their construction; as, blinded battery (masked), casemated b., floating b., inclined b. (on a slope), masked b., open b. (unprotected), raised b., sunken b.; (2) from their manner of firing; as, cross-b., direct b., dismounting b., enfilading b., oblique b., reverse b. (firing directly or obliquely on the rear), ricochet b. Other names of military batteries and related things are: barbette battery, a battery mounted on a barbette; b.-box, a box used in place of a sand-bag, or the like, in building a parapet; b.-gun, a repeating gun or machine gun; b.-head, the level of an embankment near the end; b.-wagon, a battery transport-wagon; cavalier b., on an interior work; dromedary b., composed of light guns suitable for transportation; fascine b., having the gun-parapet made of fascines; indented b., a fortification having reentrant angles in its face; joint b., one of two mutually supporting batteries; leveled b., a fortification with its interior on the general ground-level, the earth from the ditch having made the parapet; light b., an assemblage of field-guns; a battery of light-calibered guns; mortar b., a form of mitrailleuse or machine gun; siege-b., of heavy guns for sieges.

Electric Batteries.

1. Medical galvanic battery. The box contains six vulcanite cells holding acid. Parallel plates of zinc and carbon are suspended from the having an armament of platform and connected by cormortars; mountain b., of ducting-posts and binding-screws. light guns that may be When in use, the plates are low-transported, as on the ered into the cells. 2. Storage-battbacks of mules or horses, tery; b, battery plates, 10 positive in marshy, rough, or moun- and 11 negative, separated by tainous regions; Requa b., porous sheets; c, crate, to prevent a form of mitrailleuse or splashing; s, s, lead screws.

2. Elec. (1) A number of electrical couples, cells, dynamos, or Leyden jars operating as a single source of

The principal types of electric battery in practical use are (1) the chemical, galvanic, or voltaic, in which the energy of the current is transformed chemical energy; (2) the thermoelectric or pyroelectric, in which heat-energy is converted into that of electricity; and (3) the secondary or storage, serving merely to store energy from an outside source. Each cell of the voltaic battery consists in general of two different metals, immersed in a fluid or fluids that act chemically on one of them, as zinc and copper in solutions of zinc sulfate and copper sulfate respectively in the Daniell type, zinc and platinum in dilute sulfuric and strong nitric acids, respectively, in the Grove, or zinc and carbon in ammonium chlorid in the Leclanché. The thermoelectric battery consists in general of strips of two metals, as bismuth and antimony, so arranged that alternate junctions can be heated while the others are kept cool. Storage-batteries consist usually of lead plates immersed in an electrolyte. A current, as from a dynamo, causes the positive and negative plates to be affected differently, and hence, when it ceases and the proper connections are made, they act like different metals, and set up a reverse current at once on the principle of the ordinary voltaic cell. While the energy "stored" in the battery is thus chemical, it can be obtained at will in the electrical form. Edison's storage battery, a voltaic combination in an alkaline electrolyte. The active materials are oxids of nickel and of iron, the positive plate consisting of a grid of nickel-plated steel, holding 30 tubes filled with an oxid of nickel interspersed with nickel-flake; and the negative plate consisting of a similar grid, containing 24 flat rectangular pockets filled with an oxid of iron mixed with a small proportion of mercury. The plates are placed alternately and when assembled with proper insulating pieces are put into a nickel-plated can or container, whose cover is welded on by an autogenous process. The electrolyte is a solution of caustic potash in water. The battery weighs only about one-half as much as a lead battery for the same output.

Many electric batteries derive their names (1) from a substance used in the cells; as, alum-battery, carbon-b., chlorid-of-lime, -silver, or -tin b., coke-b., gas-b., nickel-b., perchlorid-of-iron b., peroxid-of-lead or -manganese b., selenium-b., water-b., etc.; (2) from their inventor; as, Bunsen b., Byrne b., Callan b., Camacho b., Carré b., Clamond b., Gaiffe b., Latimer-Clark b., Menotto b., Muirhead b., Münch b., Nobilis b., Planté b., Poncl b., Pulvermacher b., etc.; (3) from the nature of the sources of electricity combined; as, dynamo b., galvanic b., Leyden-jar b., thermoelectric b., etc. Other varieties are: aerated battery, a battery in which polarization of the negative element is prevented by agitating the exciting fluid by a current of air (see POLARIZATION); agglomerated b., in which the salt for preventing polarization is compressed into a cylinder around the negative element, thus replacing the porous cup; bank-b., one from which separate circuits are supplied with current, also one connected in multiple arc; cautery-b., with high electromotive force and low internal resistance, for heating a cautery-wire; closed- or open-circuit b., see CIRCUIT; column b., a voltaic pile; double-fluid b., having two exciting fluids; dry b., a battery composed of cells whose contents are solid or nearly so; a dry pile; floating b., a storage-battery connected between live wires or feeders in such a way that it charges at light load and discharges at heavy load; gravity b., a two-fluid battery in which there is no porous cup and in which the fluids are separated by their different specific gravities; inconstant b., any single-fluid battery; magazine b., in which the strength of the excitant solution is kept up by a supply of the crystals or other substance immersed therein; marine b., one excited by the water of the ocean; mechanical b., in which polarization is prevented and the action increased by agitation of the plates; perfluent b., in which the flow of the exciting liquid through it keeps it constant; plunge-b., plunging-b., in which one or both elements may be withdrawn from the exciting fluid, to render it inoperative, when desired; pneumatic b., an aerated battery; split b., a voltaic battery connected in series (see SERIES), and having one of its middle plates connected with the ground so as to maintain its poles at potentials differing in opposite directions from those of the earth; standard b., a battery having constant electromotive force. 3. Hat-making. A large open boiling-vat having a conical plank bottom, and containing diluted sulfuric acid: used in felting. 4. Law. Any unlawful beating or use of force by one person upon another committed wilfully or from want of sufficient care: usually in the phrase assault and battery. Compare ASSAULT.

> The least touching of another's person wilfully, or in anger, is a battery. BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iii, ch. 8, p. 120.

5. Mining. (1) A structure of timber to keep coal in place. (2) An embankment or platform from which miners work. 6. Any apparatus in which similar parts are assembled to serve a common end; as, a battery of evaporating-pans; a battery of prisms in a spectroscope; a battery of boilers, magnets, or reducing-stamps; a battery of hatching-jars in pisciculture; a battery of Roman candles. 7. Baseball. The pitcher and the catcher together. 8. A number of pieces of metal, or an assemblage of metal articles; especially, metal utensils used in serving meals. 9. A box or boat submerged to the rim, used in shooting wild fowl; a sink-boat: prohibited by law in many localities. 10. [Slang, W. U. S.] A revolver.

Syn.: action, affair, bout, combat, conflict, contest, encounter, engagement, fight, skirmish. Conflict is a general word which describes opponents, whether individuals or hosts, as dashed together. One continuous conflict between entire armies is a battle. Another battle may be fought upon the same field after a considerable interval; or a new battle may follow immediately, the armies meeting upon a new field. An action is brief and partial; a battle may last for days. Engagement is a somewhat formal expression for battle; as, it was the commander's purpose to avoid a general engagement. A protracted war, including many battles, may be a stubborn contest. Combat, originally a hostile encounter between individuals, is now used also for extensive engagements. A skirmish is between small detachments or scattered troops. An encounter may be either purposed or accidental, between individuals or armed forces. Fight is a word of less dignity than battle; we should not ordinarily speak of Waterloo as a fight, unless where the word is used in the sense of fighting; as, I was in the thick of the fight. — Ant.: armistice, concord, peace, suspension of hostilities, truce. — Prep.: a battle of giants; battle between armies; a battle for life, against invaders; a battle to the death; the battle of (more rarely at) Marathon.

— Battle Above the Clouds, the contest above the clouds, forming part of the battle of Chattanooga, Nov. 24, 1863, and resulting in the capture of Lookout Mountain by the Federal troops under General Hooker. — bat'tle-lan"tern, *n. Bau"mé', 1 bô"mē'; 2 bô"me', Antoine (3/28 1728–10/12 1804). A French chemist and inventor of the Baumé aerometer and hydrometers.— Baumé hydrometer, either of the two hydrometers using Baumé's scale.

The [Baumé] hydrometer . . . consists of a common hydrometer graduated in the following manner. Certain fixed points were first determined upon the stem of the instrument. The first of these was found by immersing the hydrometer in pure water, and marking the stem at the level of the surface. This formed the zero of the scale. Fifteen standard solutions of pure common salt in water were then prepared, containing respectively 1, 2, 3, . . . 15% (by weight) of dry salt. The hydrometer was plunged in these solutions in order, and the stem having been marked at the several surfaces, the degrees so obtained were numbered 1, 2, 3, . . . 15. . . . The instrument thus adapted to the determination of densities exceeding that of water was called the hydrometer for salts.

The hydrometer intended for densities less than that of water, or the hydrometer for spirits, is constructed on a similar principle. . . . A solution containing 10% of pure salt is used to indicate the zero of the scale, and the point at which the instrument floats when immersed in distilled water at 10° R. (54½° F.) is numbered 10. Equal divisions are then marked off upward along the stem as far as the 50th degree.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed. vol. xiv, p. 163.

— Baumé's scale (Physics), either of the hydrometric scales designed by Antoine Baumé for determining the specific gravity of (1) acids; (2) spirits. See BAUMÉ HYDROMETER; HYDROMETER, 1. Readings on Baumé's scale can be approximately converted into specific gravities by the following formulas: (1) for liquids of greater specific gravity than water, sp. gr. = 144 ÷ (144 − Baumé reading); (2) for liquids of less specific gravity than water, sp. gr. = 144 ÷ (134 + Baumé reading).

be, 1 bī; 2 bē, vi. [AM, ART, IS, ARE, pres.; WAS, WAST, WERE, imp.; BE (BEEST, Shakespeare to Milton), WERE, WERT, subj.; BE, imper.; BEEN, pp.; BEING, ppr. Prov. or Obs. — BE, BEEST, BEETH, or BES, pres.; BE, BETH, BEN, pl.]

This verb, which is called the substantive verb, is defective, and its conjugation is made up of fragments of three independent verbs, furnishing be, am, and was, respectively.

1. To exist, either as a real in distinction from an imaginary thing, or as an imagined fact. In the latter meaning of the word, the act of imagination itself is; to have existence; possess truth or actuality; have being; as, we believe that God is; can such things be?

In some philosophical systems, to be is either sharply contrasted with, or even opposed to the verb to exist — the latter as having more the characteristics of appearance, of being phenomenal, or unreal.

> It is not to enjoy, but to be, that we long for.
> ROBERTSON Sermons first series, ser. xix, p. 212. [H. 1872.]

2. To exist or be conceived of as existing in a special state, manner, or relation indicated by a word or words joined to the verb; as, man is weak; great is Diana of the Ephesians; Alfred was king of England.

In this use be is a connecting link or copula between the subject and the predicate.

> Blessed is he that considereth the poor. Ps. xli, 1.

3. To come to pass; take place; happen; as, it is to be, and we must accept it; the fair was on Monday.

> An 'twere to me, I should be mad at it.
> SHAKESPEARE Merchant of Venice act v, sc. 1.

4. To belong; pertain; concern: with to; as, peace be to this house; is it nothing to you that we are afflicted?

> Thine evermore, most dear lady, whilst this machine is to him, Hamlet. SHAKESPEARE Hamlet act ii, sc. 2.

As an auxiliary verb be is used (1) to construct (a) progressive forms; as, we are passing the bay; (b) passive forms; as, he was loved; (2) with the infinitive, phrases of futurity or obligation; as, I am to go on Monday; the concert was to have been given last week; (3) in the perfect and pluperfect tenses of a few intransitive verbs; as, he is gone (= he has gone): in old books, as in Bunyan, frequent, and now used occasionally.

[< AS. beōn, be, < √bhū, exist; cp. L. fu-i, was. For the other two roots which help to make up the substantive v., see AM, WAS.] — be it so, let it be so: a phrase conveying assent. — if so be, in case; even if. — let it be, let be, leave it alone; do nothing. — to be from, to have come from or be a native of; as, I am from England. — to have been (here, there, to see, or the like) [Colloq.], to have gone or come: only with some limiting words, or plain abbreviation of them; as, the doctor has been here, and says the patient is worse.

be-, prefix. By; near; on; about: used (1) in its original prepositional sense; (2) to render intransitive verbs transitive; (3) to form verbs of adjectives or nouns; (4) to intensify the notion of a verb; (5) to give a secondary meaning to a simple verb; (6) with nouns, adjectives, or adverbs, to form conjunctions, prepositions, or other adverbs; (7) with privative force; (8) without special force. [< AS. be-, bi-, < bi, by.] The combinations of be- that have special importance or are widely used appear in vocabulary place. Others of minor importance are given with brief definitions below. Many arbitrary combinations of be-, that may be made at will by prefixing be- to a verb, a noun, or a participle, are omitted. Still other forms that are in use are self-explaining in classes, as follows: (1) Verbs or participial adjectives (sometimes with derived nouns) that by the prefix be- are made more emphatic, or, when made from nouns, signify to make like or affect with what the noun indicates; as, bepelt, to pelt soundly; beshine, to shine upon or about:

Syn.: bastinado, batter, belabor, bruise, castigate, chastise, conquer, cudgel, defeat, flog, overcome, pommel, pound, scourge, smite, spank, strike, surpass, switch, thrash, vanquish, whip, worst. Strike is the word for a single blow; to beat is to strike repeatedly, as a bird beats the air with its wings. Others of the foregoing words describe the manner of beating, as bastinado, to beat on the soles of the feet; belabor, to inflict a comprehensive and exhaustive beating; cudgel, to beat with a stick; thrash, as wheat was beaten out with the old hand-flail; to pound (akin to L. pondus, a weight) is to beat with a heavy, and pommel with a blunt, instrument. To batter and to bruise refer to the results of beating; that is battered which is broken or defaced by repeated blows on the surface (compare synonyms for SHATTER); that is bruised which has suffered even one severe contusion. The metaphorical sense of beat, however, so far preponderates that one may be very badly bruised and battered, and yet not be said to be beaten, unless he has got the worst of the beating. To beat a combatant is to disable or dishearten him for further fighting. Hence beat becomes the synonym for every word which implies getting the advantage of another. See CONQUER; REPEL; SUBDUE.— Ant.: fail, fall, get the worst of, go down, go under. Almost all antonyms in this class are passive, and can be formed indefinitely from the conquering words by the use of the auxiliary be; as, be beaten, be defeated, be conquered, etc.— Prep.: beat with a stick over the head; beat by a trick; out of town, out of sight; beat to the ground; into submission.

— a beating wind (Naut.), a wind directly ahead, necessitating tacking.— to beat about. 1. Naut. To hold up against the wind by tacking and beating. 2. Hence, to hold an indirect and uncertain course in any business or discussion.— to b. about the bush, to approach a subject in a roundabout way.— to b. all, to b. all hollow [Colloq., U. COLERIDGE Christabel pt. i, st. 9.

2. Finely illustrating a type or principle; complete and harmonious in form or development; as, a beautiful specimen in botany, or case in surgery.

Syn.: attractive, beauteous, bewitching, charming, comely, delightful, elegant, exquisite, fair, fine, good-looking, graceful, handsome, lovely, picturesque, pretty. The definition of beauty, "perfection of form," is a good key to the meaning of beautiful, if we understand "form" in its widest sense. There must also be harmony and unity, and in human beings spiritual loveliness, to constitute an object or a person really beautiful. Thus, we speak of a beautiful landscape, a beautiful poem. But beautiful implies also, in concrete objects, softness of outline and delicacy of mold; it is opposed to all that is hard and rugged; hence we say a beautiful woman, but not a beautiful man. Beautiful has the further limit of not transcending our powers of appreciation. Pretty expresses in a far less degree that which is pleasing to a refined taste in objects comparatively small, slight, and dainty; as, a pretty bonnet; a pretty girl. That is handsome which is not only superficially pleasing, but well and harmoniously proportioned, with usually the added idea that it is made so by art, breeding, or training; as, a handsome horse; a handsome house. Handsome is a term far inferior to beautiful; we may even say a handsome villain. Fair denotes what is bright, smooth, clear, and without blemish; as, a fair face. The word applies wholly to what is superficial; we can say "fair, yet false." In a specific sense, fair has the sense of blond, as opposed to dark or brunette. One who possesses vivacity, wit, good nature, or other pleasing qualities may be attractive without beauty. Comely denotes an aspect that is smooth, genial, and wholesome, with a certain fulness of contour and pleasing symmetry, while falling short of the beautiful; as, a comely matron. That is picturesque which would make a striking picture. See also AGREEABLE; CHARMING; ELEGANT; FINE; LOVELY. — Ant.: awkward, clumsy, deformed, disgusting, frightful, ghastly, grim, grisly, grotesque, hideous, horrid, odious, repulsive, shocking, ugly, uncouth, ungainly. — Prep.: beautiful to the eye; beautiful in appearance, in spirit; "beautiful for situation," Ps. xlvii, 2; beautiful of aspect, of its kind.

— the beautiful, beauty in the abstract; the domain of beauty; also, that which is beautiful: distinguished from the true and the good; as, the beautiful in nature or art. In the threefold division of ideals as made by some writers, the beautiful is apprehended by the taste or esthetic powers, the true by the logical or rational, the good by the moral or practical powers. Anything may thus be at the same time true, beautiful, and good, but from different points of view and for different reasons.

This conducts us to the essential foundation of the distinction between the idea of the beautiful and the sensation of the agreeable, to wit, the difference already explained between sensibility and reason. COUSIN True, Beautiful, etc. tr. by Wight, p. 127. [A. 1855.]

The beautiful can never die. If the gods have deserted their oracles, they have not deserted the souls who aspire to them.

beau'ty, } 1 biū'ti; 2 bū'ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tiş, pl.] beu'ty", } 1. That quality of objects, whether in nature, art, or man, that appeals to and gratifies the esthetic feelings and forms the basis of esthetic judgments,— sometimes called "judgments of taste." The most essential characteristic of this quality seems to be a certain perfection of form (in the broader significance of the latter word) physical or spiritual, resulting from the harmonious combination of diverse elements in unity; the beautiful.

The conditions or elements of beauty may be considered as embracing (1) the imaginative or sensuous expression of unity in variety (the principle recognized by the ancient Greeks), (2) the presence and activity of rational or spiritual personality (the principle of the moderns), and (3) perfection of (esthetic or artistic) form. The theories of the ancient Greeks regarding beauty are allied to metaphysics: (a) The Platonic-Aristotelian theory holds that beauty resides in order, and in the elements of order — unity and multiplicity (harmony, measure, proportion), and, secondly, that beauty is identical with the good. (b) The Platinian or Neo-Platonic theory holds that the whole and not the part is beautiful, that "everything is beautiful in its own essential being," and that true art contains the essence of beauty. The Church Fathers adopt and emphasize the esthetic optimism of the Greeks. The Scholastics develop the Platonic-Aristotelian ideas and include contemplation as an essential of beauty. In modern philosophy the Empiricists (beginning with Francis Bacon) regard beauty as a sensualistic conception, while the Rationalists (Descartes, Leibnitz, Boileau) differentiate between the sensation and the idea. Kant regards the subjectivity of the beautiful as a law and not merely as a fact. In post-Kantian thought, beauty is a creation of the "ego absolute" (Fichte), the "absolute" (Schelling), the "mind" (Hegel), the "will" (Schopenhauer). The Herbartians limit beauty to a perception of form and relation, as opposed to the Hegelians, and place it in the realm of psychology instead of metaphysics. The modern tendency is to combine the Greek theories with the modern, and to regard beauty not as an absolute but as a relative conception and existing in expressed order. The act of apprehending and appreciating beauty awakens the emotion of the beautiful, which is accompanied by a pleasurable feeling often mistaken for it.

Five principal kinds of beauty may be distinguished: that of the sublime, of the proportional, of the graceful, of the wild or luxurious, and of the pretty or handsome. These are distinguished by the physiological and psychological elements and accompaniments which compose the complex states of consciousness with which different kinds of objects are appreciated as beautiful.

But if beauty consists . . . in form as a revelation of some mode or act of mind through some medium, then it must be alike for every mind that can receive such revelation through such a medium. Day Science of Æsthetics bk. i, p. 25. [C. C. C. 1872.]

Every beautiful object, whatever be the kind of beauty which it especially emphasizes and represents, is beautiful because it suggests in a concrete way some one or more of the characteristics of an ideal spiritual life. G. T. LADD Knowledge, Life, and Reality, p. 423. [D. M. & CO. '09.]

2. The sense of the beautiful, or the power in man of perceiving and appreciating the beautiful; the esthetic faculty, including taste and constructive imagination. See CONSTRUCTION; TASTE.

[< BE- + CAUSE, n.]

Syn.: as, for, inasmuch as, since. Because, literally by-cause, is the most direct and complete word for giving the reason of a thing. Since, originally denoting succession in time, signifies a succession in a chain of reasoning, a natural inference or result. As indicates something like, coordinate, parallel. Since is weaker than because; as is weaker than since; either may introduce the reason before the main statement; thus, since or as you are going, I will accompany you. Often the weaker word is the more courteous, implying less constraint; for example, as you request it, I will come, rather than I will come because you request it. Inasmuch as is a formal and qualified expression, implying by just so much, and no more; thus, inasmuch as the debtor has no property, I abandon the claim. For is a loose connective, giving often mere suggestion or indication rather than reason or cause; as, it is morning, for (not because) the birds are singing.— Ant.: altho, however, nevertheless, notwithstanding.

be-cum'r, } BE-COM'ING.] I. t. 1. To be proper or suitable to; accord with; be worthy of; befit; as, your conduct does not become you.

THOMAS KYD Spanish Tragedy act i, sc. 1.

2. To set off fittingly; be becoming to; grace: said of articles of dress; as, her hat becomes her.

II. i. 1. To come to a state or condition from any previous one; pass or change into something different, in substance, essence, or determining qualities or characteristics; grow to be; as, the girl becomes a woman.

Be what you are. This is the first step toward becoming better than you are. A. W. AND J. C. HARE Guesses at Truth second series, p. 502. [MACM. 1889.]

2. To come into being; begin; come about. 3. To be fit, suitable, or proper. 4†. To come. [ME. becumen, come to, become, < AS. becuman, befall (= OHG. biqueman, come to, become, > biquāmi, convenient, pleasing; cp. AS. gecwēme, convenient, becoming; Goth. gagimith, it is fit; L. convenit, it is fit), < be-, BE-, + cuman; see COME.] Syn.: see COMPORT; MAKE.— to become of, to be the present or final end, result, condition, or place of; as, what will become of me? what has become of that book?

be-cum'ing†, } Naturally or properly belonging; befitting; appropriate; worthy; suitable; as, a becoming modesty.

Nothing ought to be held laudable or becoming, but what nature itself should prompt us to think so. STEELE Spectator Mar. 7, 1710.

2. Enhancing beauty; esthetically appropriate; pleasing; adorning; as, a becoming cloak: formerly sometimes with of. be-comed'†.

Syn.: befitting, beseeming, comely, decent, decorous, fit, fitting, graceful, neat, proper, seemly, suitable. That is becoming in dress which suits the complexion, figure, and other qualities of the wearer so as to produce on the whole a pleasing effect. That is decent which does not offend modesty or propriety. That is suitable which is adapted to the age, station, situation, and other circumstances of the wearer; coarse, heavy boots are suitable for farm-work; a juvenile style of dress is not suitable for an old lady. In conduct much the same rules apply. The dignity and gravity of a patriarch would not be becoming to a child; at a funeral lively, cheery sociability would not be decorous, while noisy hilarity would not be decent; sumptuous display would not be suitable for a poor person. Fit is a compendious term for whatever fits the person, time, place, occasion, etc.; as, a fit person; a fit abode; a fit place. Fitting, or befitting, is somewhat more elegant, implying a nicer adaptation. See APPROPRIATE. Compare BEAUTIFUL, MODEST.— Ant.: awkward, ill-becoming, ill-fitting, improper, indecent, indecorous, unbecoming, unfit, unsuitable.— Prep.: becoming to the wearer; such conduct was becoming in him.— be-com'ing-ly, adv. In a becoming manner or style; fittingly.— be-com'ing-ness, n. The quality of being becoming; suitableness; propriety.

be-com'ing, n. 1. The act or process of beginning to be or of change in general: metaphysically contrasted with being, as implying the ceasing, as well as the beginning, to exist.

From the first the principle of becoming, either as opposed or supplementary to that of being, has played an important rôle in philosophical speculation. Heraclitus made it prominent among the ancient Greeks, rather in the form of opposition; while among moderns, Lotze made the reconciliation of becoming, under the title of mechanism, with being, under the title of idea, the problem of his philosophical system.

In the course of speculation becoming has signified: (1) The coming into being; genesis. (2) The transition from state to state. (3) In Hegel's philosophy, the unity of being and of nothing, or rather of non-being: and thus a sort of reconciliation of the two extremes and an advance in the evolution of spiritual being.
K.-F. Vocab. Philos. [SH. & CO. 1878.]

2. That which is fit, suitable, or appropriate. 3†. An adornment.

II. i. 1. To retire to or occupy the same bed, as man and wife; to cohabit. 2. To make a lair, as the roe; get together to pass the night, as ducks, etc. 3. To sleep. 4. To form a closely packed layer, as wet straw. 5. Mech. To rest on for support; as, the rails bed on the ballast. [< AS. beddian, make ready a bed, < bed, bed.]

Beds.
1. Ancient Egyptian. 2. Greek. 3. Chinese. 4. French Bed of the Middle Ages. 5. Modern metal bed: a, head; b, foot; c, casters; d, side-rails, or angle-irons; e, filling rods; f, pillar; g, top rail.

bed, n. 1. An article of furniture to rest or sleep in or on; a couch. Specifically: (1) A flat sack made usually of ticking or like material and stuffed with straw, cotton, feathers, or other soft, yielding material; also, a mattress: distinguished from the bedstead on which it is placed and the bedclothes with which it is covered. (2) The tick or mattress and bedclothes combined; bedding; also, these combined with the bedstead. (3) A bedstead.

Beds for sleeping or reclining are often named (1) from their filling; as, air bed, feather bed, flock bed, hydro- static or water bed, straw bed; (2) from their construction; as, brass bed, folding bed, iron bed, woven-wire bed; (3) from their use; as, field-bed (army), hospital-bed, etc.

Bed is the first element in many compounds, mostly self-explaining, naming things used for, in, or about a bed; as, bed-chair (combined chair and bed), bedclothes (coverings for a bed), bedcover (coverlet), bed-frame, bed-lounge (combined lounge and bed), bedpost (corner post of a bed), bedquilt, bed-sacking, bed-spring, bed-steps (for a high bed), bedtick (see TICK), bedticking.

2. Hence, any place or thing used for a couch or for sleeping in or on; as, a bed of hay, straw, or hemlock boughs; a rocky bed. 3. A heavy horizontal mass of matter, or a collection of closely massed objects, especially used or considered as a foundation or support. 4. The ground at the bottom of a body of water; as, a river-bed; the bed of the ocean. 5. In technical use, one of a large number of things resembling, likened to, or used for a bed. Some of them are: (1) Mech. Some part or surface which serves as a foundation, as the part of a printing-press which supports the form, or a part from which work is fed to a machine. (2) Masonry. (a) A layer of mortar in which stones or bricks are to be laid. (b) A horizontal course of a stone wall. (c) The lower side of a slate, tile, or brick. (3) Naut. The cradle of a vessel on the stocks. (4) Hort. A plot of ground prepared for planting some particular thing, or the plants, etc., growing in such a plot; as, a radish-bed. (5) Bookbinding. Dissolved gum tragacanth prepared for marking book-edges. (6) Billiards & Pool. That part of the table bounded by the cushions. (7) Railroad. A road-bed. (8) Ordnance. The support of the old-fashioned smoothbore mortar.

6. One of the divisions marked out in the game of hop-scotch. 7. Geol. (1) Any layer in a mass of stratified rock, often distinguished by some special characters from contiguous layers.

There is a tendency to use the term bed or beds more particularly in connection with the softer and less consolidated rocks of the Cretaceous, Tertiary, and Quaternary systems. Beds are named from the place of their occurrence, from the time of their formation, from their manner of deposition, from their lithologic character, or from their characteristic fossil or mineral contents; as, the Aftonian beds (Pleistocene of Illinois); Ceratops b. (Cretaceous or Tertiary of Wyoming); Como b. (Cretaceous of Wyoming); Glauconitic b. (Cretaceous of Texas); Graud Gulf b. (Tertiary of Louisiana). See GEOLOGY.

(2) A deposit, as of ore, parallel to the stratification, later in origin than the rock below, and older than the rock above, thus constituting a regular member of the series of formations, and not an intrusion. 8. A collection of wild fowl massed together, as ducks. 9. The marriage-bed; hence conjugal cohabitation, or the right to it. [AS.]

1. Worker. 2. Drone. 3. Queen.

bee¹, 1 bi; 2 bē, n. 1. A social honey-gathering hymenopterous insect of the genus Apis; especially, the common hive-bee (A. mellifica).

The honey-bee, which has been domesticated in hives for its wax and honey for many centuries, lives in colonies, each colony containing usually one queen bee or perfect female, numerous partially developed females (workers), and part of the year a few hundred males (drones). The workers are the gatherers of honey, licking it up from flowers with their proboscis and afterward disgorging it into the honeycomb-cells. The Italian or Ligurian bee (Apis ligustica), the Egyptian bee (A. fasciata), the common black or German bee (A. nigra), the slate-colored Carniolan, etc., are different races of one species, A. mellifica. In this and most other bees the ovipositor is modified to serve as a stinging weapon.

Various implements used in the care and cultivation of bees, or connected with or produced by them, have self-explaining names; as, bee-apron, -dress, -glove (impregnated with linseed-oil and dried in the sun), -hat, -suit, -veil, an apron, etc., for protection against bee-stings. 2. Any other apid melliferous insect or an andrenid; as, a carpenter-bee, leaf-cutter bee, mason-bee, solitary bee, etc. 3. [Dial., Eng.] A fly. 4. A semi-social gathering of friends and neighbors who assist their host in some light agricultural or domestic task that can be combined with sociability; a party met for some special design or object; as, a paring-bee; quilting-bee; spelling-bee. [ME. bee (pl. bees and been), < AS. beō (pl. beōn, the orig. inflectional -n being retained in the extended G. biene, bee), bee, < √ bhī, fear, tremble.] — bee's-balm", n. 1. [< BE, v.]

beer[1], n. 1. An alcoholic beverage produced from various substances containing starch, usually barley, by first bringing the starch into a more soluble condition by malting, then heating the ground malt, during which operation the starch is changed into dextrin and glucose, afterward boiling the product with hops, and finally fermenting it with yeast, which decomposes the glucose ($C_6H_{12}O_6$) into alcohol ($2C_2H_5OH$) and carbon dioxid ($2CO_2$). Compare ALE.

The beers formerly drunk in the United States were of three distinct kinds: (1) lager-beer, which was originally made during the early winter for consumption during the summer. For its manufacture only a small proportion of hops was used, and it was submitted to prolonged fermentation (4 to 6 months) at a low temperature (40° to 60° Fahr.). stock b.†. (2) schenk b., fermented in 4 to 6 weeks and brewed for immediate use in the winter: named from the necessity of being put on schenk (draft) as soon as it was made, to keep it from turning sour. new b.†; winter b.†; young b.†. (3) bock b., extra strong, and requiring about 2 months for brewing: served in the early spring. With improved processes, such as artificial refrigeration, these different varieties were gradually merged one into the other, so that the so called lager-beer could be made as quickly as the schenk beer. The beers of England are commonly known in the trade as ales; as, Burton ale, pale ale, East India ale, etc. Beers (ales, etc.) vary in alcohol from 2 to 7 per cent.

Beer from different localities exhibited peculiar features, the result of changes in manufacture: as, Berlin b., Culmbach b., Dantzic b., Detroit b., Milwaukee b., Munich (Bavarian) b., New York b., Pilsen (Bohemian) b., Rochester b., St. Louis b., Strasburg b., Vienna b.

YOUNG Love of Fame satire iv, l. 191.

2. To make supplication; sue; plead. 3. Card-playing. In the game of all-fours, to ask for a point or three more cards and a new trump. [ME. beggen, contr. < AS. bedecian, beg, freq. < bed-, for bid-, < biddan; see BID.]

SYN.: ask, beseech, crave, entreat, implore, petition, pray, request, solicit, supplicate. One asks what he feels that he may fairly claim and reasonably expect; "If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father," Luke xi, 11; he begs for that to which he advances no claim but pity. Entreat implies a special earnestness of asking, and beseech, a still added and more humble intensity. To implore is to ask with weeping and lamentation; to supplicate is to ask, as it were, on bended knees. Crave and request are somewhat formal terms; crave has almost disappeared from conversation; request would seem distant between parent and child. Pray is now used chiefly of address to the Supreme Being; petition is used of written request to persons in authority; as, to petition the legislature to pass an act, or the governor to pardon an offender.— ANT.: claim, command, demand, enforce, exact, extort, insist, require.— PREP.: to beg for bread; to beg of a person.

— to beg the question, to take for granted the matter in dispute; assume without warrant something that involves the point under discussion.— to go a-begging, to be without market value; seek in vain for a purchaser or receiver.— beg'ga-bl(ᴇ", a. That may be begged.

2. The first stage of an action or epoch; the first part; as, he made a good beginning. 3. The source, origin, or first cause of anything; as, "I am . . . the beginning," Rev. i, 8. 4. [B-] In mystical philosophy, the first person in the Trinity: so used by Dionysius. JOHN COLET Hierarchies of Dionysius p. 39. [1869.] be-gin'†; be-ginne'†.

SYN.: commencement, foundation, inauguration, inception, initiation, opening, origin, outset, preface, prelude, rise, source, start, threshold. "The Latin commencement is more formal than the Saxon beginning, as the verb commence is more formal than begin. Commencement is for the most part restricted to some form of action, while beginning has no restriction, but may be applied to action, state, material, extent, enumeration, or to whatever else may be conceived of as having a first part, point, degree, etc. The letter A is at the beginning (not the commencement) of the alphabet. If we were to speak of the commencement of the Pacific Railroad, we should be understood to refer to the enterprise and its initiatory act; if we were to refer to the road-way we should say "Here is the beginning of the Pacific Railroad." In the great majority of cases begin and beginning are preferable to commence and commencement. An origin is the point from which something starts or sets out, often involving, and always suggesting causal connection; as, the origin of evil; the origin of a nation, government, or family. A source is that which furnishes a first and continuous supply; as, the source of a river; a source of knowledge; a source of inspiration; fertile land is a source (not an origin) of wealth. A rise is thought of as in an action; we say that a lake is the source of a certain river. Motley wrote of "The Rise of the Dutch Republic." Compare CAUSE.— ANT.: close, completion, conclusion, consummation, end, termination.

This participle has a special modern use with passive forms of verbs to express progressive action; as, is, are, or was being built, expresses what is expressed also by is, are, or was building, a-building, or in building.
Richard Whately, George P. Marsh, Richard Grant White, and other critics have objected strenuously to the use of "is being built," "was being built," and kindred forms of English imperfects passive, as recent and unwarranted innovations; but Fitzedward Hall has shown conclusively that they are neither recent nor unwarranted, but have been used by the best writers for a century, and now have well-nigh universal literary sanction. He says:
Prior to the evolution of is being built and was being built, we possessed no discriminate equivalents of ædificatur and ædificabatur; is built and was built, by which they were rendered, corresponding exactly to ædificatus est and ædificatus erat.
Modern English, p. 350. app. [S. 1873.]
Is growing, was growing, indicate an activity from within; as, the tree is growing (from its own internal forces): is being grown, was being grown, the activity of some agent from without; as, the plant is being grown (by the gardener). So also, and strikingly, is bleeding (as from a wound), and is being bled (as by a surgeon).
be'ing, n. 1. Anything that exists or is conceived as having existence: the widest of all categories, embracing nature and the supernatural, which see.
"This [being] applies to everything which exists in any way whether as substance or accident, whether actually or potentially, whether in the nature of things, or only in our notions; for even what we call entia rationis, or fictions of our minds, such as hippo-centaur, or mountain of gold, have a being; even negation or privation has an existence: nay, according to Aristotle, we can say that nothing has a being. In short, whenever we can use the substantive verb is, there must be some kind of being." K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 64. [SH. & CO. 1873.]
Thing, individual, person—ens, suppositum, hypostasis, as the scholastics have it—these are the three degrees in the dynamic evolution of being. W. S. LILLY Right and Wrong p. 103. [C. & H. 1890.]
Specifically: (1) Any concrete object or thing. (2) A human individual: often used idealistically or in contempt; as, he is a strange being.
There is an ideal feminine virtue and loveliness in the character and career of this exquisite being [Enone] of the Idean woods.
S. G. W. BENJAMIN Troy pt. i, ch. 1, p. 7. [S. 1888.]
(3) [B-] God: used often with qualifying words; as, the Divine Being; the Supreme Being. 2. Existence as opposed to non-existence, especially as involving life or consciousness; physical and mental existence; as, to call men into being; "while I have any being"; he felt in the depths of his being. 3. Metaph. Existence viewed as the fundamental quality of things; essence; entity; substance; as, the being of matter; "in Him we live and move and have our being." 4. [Prov. Bel², 1 bel; 2 bĕl, n. The supreme god, or one of the chief gods, of the Babylonians (Isa. xlvi): Chaldaic form of Baal, and believed by some to be identical with him. Be'lus†.
Bel is identified with Zeus by Herodotus, and believed by Rawlinson to have been different from the Syrian Baal, and as Bel-Merodach connected with the planet Jupiter, with which, in the astral mythology, the productive power of nature is associated. The name Bel, like the equivalent Hebrew "Ba'al," was also used in the sense of "lord" or "owner."
It is not the Bel of Nippur whose name appears in the Bible. . . . On account of the rise and supremacy of the city of Babylon under Hammurabi (2250 B. C.), Marduk (Merodach), the god of that city, was invested with the prerogatives and even with the name of Bel, so that in the comparatively modern Old Testament times Bel stands for 'Merodach' and for him only. J. F. MCCURDY in New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. ii, p. 31. [r. & w. '08.]

be-lief', 1 bı-lif'; 2 be-lēf', n. 1. A conviction or assurance of the truth or actuality of anything on other grounds than clear perception or indisputable argument: acceptance as true by reason of sentiment or rational conviction rather than positive knowledge. Belief is, however, held by most psychologists to be an essential element, or aspect, of all knowledge. In Early English belief was the equivalent of what is now commonly called faith; but in Middle and Modern English it has been confined mainly to the purely intellectual process, excluding the moral element of trust or confidence embraced in faith. Faith in Christ is belief in Christ, combined with trust in Him. Compare FAITH.
Belief, in the generic sense now contemplated, includes every degree of conviction from the feeblest to the strongest.
E. J. HAMILTON Human Mind ch. 15, p. 101. [c. & BROS. 1883.]
By rational belief, then, we mean the acceptance of any thing on grounds which, while they render it probable, do not strictly compel its admission.
B. P. BOWNE Studies in Theism p. 61. [r. & N. 1879.]
Belief is the word specially selected for affirmation or denial which is predominantly referable to practical or sentimental motives.
G. F. STOUT Analytical Psychology, vol. i, p. 97. [SON. & co. 1896.]
2. Mental assent to or acceptance of anything as fact or truth on the ground of testimony or authority; intellectual, historical, or traditional faith; as, belief in history.
Belief is purely intellectual. Faith is properly spiritual.
NEWMAN Phases of Faith ch. 8, p. 173. [rn. & co. 1865.]
3. Theol. (1) Assurance of the truths of religion on the ground of the divine testimony; religious faith.
All the great ages have been ages of belief.
EMERSON Conduct of Life, Worship p. 171. [H. M. & co. 1888.]
(2) Faith as opposed to skepticism; especially, acceptance of the divine order and beneficence in the world and in human history.
If he [Browning] had a message, it was a message of belief.
A. LANG in Contemporary Review July, 1891, p. 80

4. That which is believed; especially, a tenet or body of tenets advocated by any person or class of persons; doctrine; creed.

Syn.: bias, bow, curve, deflect, deviate, diverge, incline, influence, mold, persuade, stoop, submit, warp, yield. In a few instances a line is spoken of as bent where the two parts make an angle; but ordinarily to bend is understood to be to draw to or through a curve; as, to bend a bow. To submit or yield is to bend the mind humbly to another's wishes. To incline or influence is to bend another's wishes toward our own; to persuade is to draw them quite over. To warp is to bend slightly through the whole fiber, as a board in the sun. To crook is to bend irregularly, as a crooked stick. Deflect, deviate, and diverge are said of any turning away; deviate commonly of a slight and gradual movement, diverge of a more sharp and decided one. To bias is to cut across the texture, or incline to one side: in figurative use always with an unfavorable import. Mold is a stronger word than bend; we may bend by superior force that which still resists the constraint; as, a bent bow; we mold something plastic entirely to some desired form.

Syn.: blessing, boon, favor. See ADVANTAGE; AVAIL; FAVOR; PROFIT. — Ant.: bereavement, calamity, damage, detriment, injury, loss, privation. — Prep.: the benefit of study to the student.

— benefit of cession (Civ. Law), a debtor's immunity from attachment and imprisonment in consideration of his making over his property for payment of creditors. — b. of clergy (Law), a privilege accorded to the clergy and afterward extended to all who could read, by which one who had been convicted in a secular court of some felony, less than treason, that involved capital punishment, could claim a hearing before the bishop's court, on his own declaration of innocence, in arrest of judgment. If not in actual orders, the convict on being discharged on this claim was branded by burning in the left hand on the ball of the thumb. Whipping and fines were afterward substituted for the burning. Among the earliest enactments of the first Congress of the United States (1790) was an act prohibiting "benefit of clergy" in any case of conviction of a capital crime under Federal laws.— b. of division (Cir. Law), the right of a cosurety to have the entire obligation distributed among his fellow sureties in the event of his being sued alone.— b. of inventory (*Cir. The laws of social benevolence require that every man should endeavor to assist others. JOHNSON Rambler Nov. 15, 1751.

2. The disposition to promote the moral well-being of men and so increase their happiness; moral good will to all sentient beings: made by some theologians the all-inclusive virtue.

In order to the perfection of benevolence itself the moral judgment of men requires all the other most cardinal virtues, both of will and of judgment. All these other cardinal virtues qualify benevolence, as benevolence employs, consecrates, and qualifies them. G. T. LADD Philosophy of Conduct, p. 355. [s. 1902.]

3. Any act of kindness or well-doing; good deeds collectively; charities bestowed.

Thoughtless benevolence may for a while create some show of good. A. HELPS Friends in Council vol. ii, ch. 4, p. 25. [JAS. M.]

4. Phren. The natural organ or propensity that prompts to kindness and liberality 5. Eng. Hist. The so-called gratuity tax or enforced loan sometimes exacted by English sovereigns as a means of raising money without recourse to Parliament from the time of Edward IV. to William and Mary; hence, any similar imposition. These "free-will offerings" were instituted by Edward IV. in 1473, and the system was followed with more or less rigor by Richard III., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Elizabeth (who, however, generally repaid them), and James I. Benevolences were declared illegal by the Bill of Rights, 1689.

SYN.: almsgiving, beneficence, benignity, bounty, charity, generosity, good will, humanity, kind-heartedness, kindliness, kindness, liberality, munificence, philanthropy, sympathy, tenderness. According to the etymology and original usage, beneficence is the doing well, benevolence the wishing or willing well to others; but benevolence has come to include beneficence, and to displace it. We should not now speak of benevolence which did not help, unless where there was no power to help; even then we should rather say good will or sympathy. Charity, which originally meant the purest love for God and man (as in 1 Cor. xiii), is now almost universally applied to some form of almsgiving, and is much more limited in meaning than benevolence. Benignity suggests some occult power of blessing, such as was formerly ascribed to the stars; we say a good man has an air of benignity. Kindness and tenderness are personal; benevolence and charity are general. Kindness extends to all sentient beings whether men or animals, in prosperity or in distress. Tenderness especially goes out toward the young, feeble, and needy, or even to the dead. Humanity is so much kindness and tenderness toward man or beast as it would be inhuman not to have; we say of some act of care or kindness, "common humanity requires it." Generosity is self-forgetful kindness in disposition or action; it includes much besides giving; as, the generosity of forgiveness. Bounty applies to ample giving, which on a larger scale is expressed by munificence. Liberality indicates broad, genial, kindly views, whether manifested in gifts or otherwise. We speak of the bounty of a generous host, the liberality or munificence of the founder of a college, or of the liberality of a theologian toward the holders of conflicting beliefs. Philanthropy applies to wide schemes for human welfare, often, but not always, involving large expenditure in charity or benevolence. See MERCY.— Ant.: barbarity, brutality, churlishness, greediness, harshness, illiberality, ill will, inhumanity, malevolence, malignity, niggardliness, selfishness, stinginess, unkindness.— Prep.: benevolence of, on the part of, or from the wealthy, to or toward the poor.

be-nev'o-lent, 1 bı-nev'o-lent; 2 be-nĕv'o-lĕnt, a. 1. Kindly disposed toward others and actively desirous of their well-being; given to benevolence; kindly; generous; charitable.

Ben'ning-ton, 1 ben'iŋ-tan; 2 bĕn'ĭng-tŏn, n. 1. A county in Vermont; 658 sq. m. 2. Its county-seat: battle-field, 1777. 3. A village in Wyoming county, N. Y.

Ben-no'I, 1 ben-ō'ī; 2 bĕn-ō'ĭ, n. Bib. (Douai).

ben'-nut", 1 ben'-nut"; 2 bĕn'-nŭt", n. The fruit of the horseradish-tree (Moringa pterygosperma) of the East Indies. benn‡. [for benjamin.

ben'ny', 1 ben'ī; 2 bĕn'y, n. [Colloq.] An overcoat: short for BENJAMIN.

Ben'ny', n. Diminutive of BENJAMIN.

be'no', 1 bē'no; 2 bē'no, n. [P. I.] Wine: a corruption of the Spanish vino, used by soldiers to designate aguardiente.

Be'no', 1 bī'no; 2 bē'no, n. Bib. 1 Chron. xxiv, 26.

ben'-oil", 1 ben'-oil"; 2 bĕn'-ŏil", n. The oil of the ben-nut. See OIL. be'hen-oil"‡; oil of ben‡.

Be-noît', 1 be-nwō'; 2 be-nwâ', n. 1. [F.] Benedict. 2. Pierre Leopold Leonard (⁸/₁₁1834–³/₁₁1901), a Belgian composer of operas, etc.

ben'sel, 1 ben'sel; 2 bĕn'sĕl, tt. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] To beat; pound.

ben'sel, n. [Prov. Eng. & Scot.] 1. A hard blow, as from a push; bending; spring; as, the bensel of oars. 2. Impulse; bent (of the mind); also, impetus (of a body in motion); as, the wind's bensel. ben'sail‡; ben'sil‡.

ben'shie, 1 ben'shī; 2 bĕn'shē, n. Same as BANSHEE.

Ben'son, 1 ben'sən; 2 bĕn'son, n. 1. Arthur Christopher (⁴/₁₁1862–⁶/₁₁1925), an English educator, poet, and author. 2. Edward Frederic (?/₁₁1867–), an English author; Dodo. 3. Edward White (?/₁₁1829–¹⁰/₁₁1896), an English divine; archbishop of Canterbury. 4. George (³/₁₁1699–⁴/₁₁1762), an English dissenting minister; theologian; History of the First Planting of Christianity. 5. Robert Hugh (¹¹/₁₅ 1871–¹⁰/₁₁1914), an English Catholic prelate and author; The Light Invisible 6. Stephen Allen (³/₁₁1816–¹/₁₁1865), an American negro statesman; President of Liberia. 7. A county in North Dakota; 1,380 sq. m. 8. A village, county-seat of Swift county, Minn.

bent, 1 bent; 2 bĕnt, pa. 1. Deflected from a straight line by pressure or otherwise; being in or forced into a curve; crooked; as, a bent rod; a bent bow. 2. Naut. Made fast to a spar or other object: said of a sail, etc. 3. Fixed in a course; inclined; set; as, on pleasure bent; homeward bent. 4. Braced for action; couched for a spring; leveled, as a weapon. 5†. Obstinate; determined. SYN.: compare BEND, v.— bent beam, a beam arched convexly above to resist downward thrust.— b. trimmer, a pair of tailors' shears with handle bent up to facilitate cutting.

bent¹, n. 1. The state of being inclined or turned, or the direction given by bending; hence, mental inclination; tendency; bias; disposition; mood; humor; as, your bent is business; the bent of his genius.

He [man] follows the bent of his own inclination.
McCOSH Divine Government bk. i, ch. 2, p. 47. [C. & BROS. 1858.]

2. The degree of tension or flexure; hence, utmost force; limit of endurance or capacity; as, to fool one to the top of his bent. 3. Carp. A section of a framed building; a portion of a framework or scaffolding of a building, put together on the ground and raised at one time; also, a large timber. 4. A wood-worker's gouge. 5. [Rare.] A declivity or slope; hillside.

Beneath the lowering brow, and on a bent.
DRYDEN Palamon and Arcite bk. ii, l. 544.

6†. A crook or bend; hence, a cast of the eye. SYN.: see INCLINATION.— bent'ly‡, adv. With set purpose.

bent², 1 bent; 2 bĕnt, n. 1. (1) Bent-grass. (2) Any one of various reedy or rush-like grasses or sedges, as the great bulrush (Scirpus lacustris). 2. The stiff flower-stalk of various grasses. 3. [Eng.] The stalk or seeding spike of either of the two common species of plantain (Plantago major and P. lanceolata); also, in Yorkshire, the dry stalks of the cat's-ear (Hypochæris radicata). 4. Land unenclosed and covered only with grass or sedge, as opposed to wood, a heath, moor, or other waste land. [< AS. beonet, = OHG. pinuz, NHG. binse, rush.] — to flee or take to the bent, to run away from one's creditors to the open country.— bent'y, a. Pertaining to or covered with bent.— bent'i-ness, n.

Bent³, n. A county in Colorado; 1,497 sq. m.; county-seat, Las Animas.

Ben"-Ta"sche-lyn', n. Same as YOOSUF-IBN-TASHEFEEN.

ben'-teak", 1 ben'-tīk"; 2 bĕn'-tēk", n. A tropical Asiatic tree (Lagerstræmia microcarpa) of the loosestrife family (Lythraceæ), or its wood; also, an inferior teak.

bent'-grass", 1 bent'-gras"; 2 bĕnt'-grăs", n. Any one of various stiff wiry grasses, especially of the genus Agrostis, or, in Australia, also the genus Deyeuxia. See phrases below and table under GRASS.— brown bent-grass, a slender erect grass (Agrostis canina) 1 to 2 feet high, native in meadows of Canada and northern United States, naturalized sparingly from Europe in the Eastern States and as a lawn-grass known as Rhode Island bent.— creeping b., a pasture grass generally regarded as a variety of red-top (Agrostis alba).— seashore b., same as BEACH-GRASS, 1. See under GRASS, n.— spider b., a low branching annual (Agrostis elliottiana) 8 to 12 inches high, with narrow flat leaves and diffuse capillary panicles. The flowering glume is notable for its long slender flexuous barbellate awn 2 to 4 times its own length. It is a native of dry hillsides and old fields from South Carolina to Florida west to Missouri and Texas.

ben'thal, 1 ben'thal; 2 bĕn'thal, a. Of, pertaining to, or designating depths of the ocean exceeding 1,000 fathoms. [< Gr. benthos, depths of the sea.]

Ben'tham, 1 ben'fam; 2 bĕn'tham, n. 1. Jeremy (²/₁₅ 1748–⁶/₁₁1832), an English jurist. See BENTHAMISM. 2. A market-town in Yorkshire, England.— Ben'tham-ism, n. The political and ethical philosophy of Jeremy Bentham; utilitarianism. Bentham taught that "nature has placed mankind under the governance of two sovereign masters, pain and pleasure," and that pleasure is the supreme end of human life. In politics, as an end of the state, the principle was expressed in the phrase "the greatest happiness of the greatest number."— Ben-tham'ic, a.— Ben'tham-ite, n.— Ben'tham-ry, n. [Rare.] Benthamism: a term of contempt.

My previous education [that is, before 1821–22] had been, in a certain sense, already a course of Benthamism.
J. S. MILL Autobiography, p. 64. [H. H. & CO. 1874.]

ben"tho-pe-lag'ic, 1 ben"tho-pi-laj'ik; 2 bĕn"tho-pe-lăj'ĭc, a. Inhabiting the depths of the ocean. [< BENTHOS + PELAGIC.]

ben'thos, 1 ben'thos; 2 bĕn'thŏs, n. The whole body of plants or animals living in or upon the sea-bottom: distinguished from plankton. The benthos of a bottom near the coast is littoral; that of more distinct depths, abyssal. [< Gr. benthos, depth.] ben'thont‡.— ben'thic, ben-thon'ic, a.

Ben"tho-sau'ri-dæ, 1 ben"tho-sō'ri-dī; 2 bĕn"tho-sa'ri-dē, n. pl. Ich. A small family of deep-sea fishes allied to the Synodontidæ, having well-developed supramaxillaries, pectorals inserted near the shoulders, and very long ventrals. Ben"tho-sau'rus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. benthos (see BENTHOS) + sauros, lizard.] — ben"tho-sau'rid, a. & n.

ben'tinck¹, 1 ben'tiŋk; 2 bĕn'tĭnk, n. Naut. A trysail now superseded by the storm-trysail: invented by Captain Bentinck (1737–1775).— ben'tinck-boom", n. Naut. A small boom on a square-foresail foot.— b.-shrouds, n. pl. Naut. Stay-ropes formerly run from the weather futtock-staff to the lee channels, to support the mast laterally when the ship rolled excessively.

bent'ing, 1 bent'iŋ; 2 bĕnt'ĭng, n. 1. The seeking for bents or the seeding stalks of the plantain, as for food: rare, except in benting-time. 2. Same as BENT².— bent'ing-time", n. The time before harvest when pigeons must feed on bents. ben'net-ing-time"‡.

ben-ti'vi, 1 ben-tī'vī; 2 bĕn-tī'vĭ, n. [Braz.] A brown-and-yellow tyrant-flycatcher (Pitangus sulphuratus).

Ben"ti-vo'glio, 1 ben"ti-vō'lyo; 2 bĕn"tī-vō'lyo, Guido (1579–⁹/₁₁1644). An Italian cardinal; statesman; diplomat.

Ben'to, 1 ben'to; 2 bĕn'to, n. [Pg.] Benedict.

Ben'ton, 1 ben'tan; 2 bĕn'ton, n. 1. Thomas Hart (³/₁₄ 1782–⁴/₁₆1858), an American lawyer, Senator, and writer; Thirty Years' View. 2. A county in Arkansas; 892 sq. m.; county-seat, Bentonville. 3. A county in Indiana; 410 sq. m.; county-seat, Fowler. 4. A county in Iowa; 720 sq. m.; county-seat, Vinton. 5. A county in Minnesota, 397 sq. m.; county-seat, Sauk Rapids. 6. A county in Mississippi; 409 sq. m.; county-seat, Ashland. 7. A county in Missouri; 820 sq. m.; county-seat, Warsaw. 8. A county in Oregon; 677 sq. m.; county-seat, Corvallis. 9. A county in Tennessee; 430 sq. m.; county-seat, Camden. 10. A town in Lafayette county, Wis. 11. A village in Franklin county, Ill. 12. Geol. The lower subdivision of the Colorado group of the rocks of the Cretaceous system in the Great Plains region of North America.

Ben'ton Har'bor. A city in Berrien county, Mich.

ben'ton-ite, 1 ben'tan-ait; 2 bĕn'ton-īt, n. Geol. A non-refractory clay derived from the shale of the Fort Benton formation in the upper Missouri valley.

Ben'ton-ville, 1 ben'tan-vil; 2 bĕn'ton-vĭl, n. A town, county-seat of Benton county, Ark.

bent'-wood", 1 bent'-wud"; 2 bĕnt'-wo͝od". I. a. Formed of parts bent or curved into shape by machinery. II. n. 1. [Prov. Eng.] The English ivy. 2. Rods of wood made pliable by steam and curved to various forms by machinery.— bent-wood furniture, chairs, settees, tables, and the like built of bent wood. Originally Austrian or Vienna furniture‡.

be-numb', 1 bi-num'; 2 be-nŭm', tt. To make insensible, torpid, or inactive; deprive of sensation; stupefy; deaden.

HAWTHORNE Mosses. Christmas Banquet p. 66. [H. M. & CO.]

[The correct form would be benum, < benumen, pp. of AS. beniman, take away, < be-, BE-, + niman, take.] be-numm't; be-numme't.— be-numbed', pa. Made torpid; stupefied. be-nomme't.— be-numbed'ness, n.— be-numb'er, n.— be-numb'ment, n. The act of benumbing; torpor.

be-numd', pp. Benumbed. S. S.

Ben-vo'li-o, 1 ben-vō'li-o; 2 bĕn-vō'lĭ-o, n. In Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, Montague's nephew, and friend to Romeo.

Ben'wood, 1 ben'wud; 2 bĕn'wo͝od, n. A town in Marshall county, W. Va.

Be"ny-ow'ski, 1 bē"ni-ōf'ski; 2 be"nў-ŏf'skĭ, Maurice Augustus (1741–1786). A Hungarian adventurer; king of Madagascar.

ben-zac'e-tin, 1 ben-zas'i-tin; 2 bĕn-zăç'e-tĭn, n. Chem. A white crystalline compound ($C_6H_3(OC_2H_5)(NHCOCH_3)COOH$), used in medicine as a sedative and anodyne. [< BENZO- + ACETIN.]

ben'zal, 1 ben'zal; 2 bĕn'zal, n. Same as BENZYLIDENE.

ben"zal-chlo'rid, 1 ben'zal-klō'rid; 2 bĕn'zal-clō'rĭd, n. A colorless liquid ($C_6H_5CHCl_2$) derived from coal-tar toluene, and employed in the preparation of artificial dyes. [< BENZAL + CHLORID.] ben"zal-chlo'ride‡.

ben-zal'co-hol, 1 ben-zal'ko-hol; 2 bĕn-zăl'co-hôl, n. Chem. Benzoic alcohol.

ben-zal'de-hyde, 1 ben-zal'di-haid; 2 bĕn-zăl'de-hȳd, n. Chem. Same as BENZOIC ALDEHYDE.

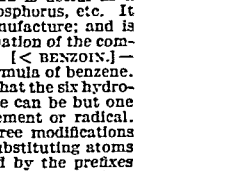
ben"zal-dox'im, 1 ben'zal-doks'im, -im or -īm; 2 bĕn'-zal-dŏks'ĭm, -ĭm or -īm, n. Chem. Either one of two isomeric crystalline compounds of the general formula ($C_6H_5CH.NOH$) or ($C_6H_5CH.NH$), oxims of benzoic aldehyde.

ben'za-mid, 1 ben'zə-mid, -mid or -məid; 2 bĕn'za-ben'za-mide, mĭd, -mīd or -mid, n. Chem. A colorless crystalline compound ($C_6H_5.CONH_2$).

ben-zau'rin, 1 ben-zō'rin, -rin or -rīn; 2 bĕn-zą'rin, ben-zau'rine, -rin or -rīn, n. Chem. A reddish crystalline powder ($C_{19}H_{12}O_2$) obtained by the action of benzotrichlorid on phenol; phenol-benzein. [< BENZ(EIN) + AURIN.]

ben'ze-in, 1 ben'zi-in; 2 bĕn'ze-ĭn, n. Chem. One of a series of hydroxylated aromatic carbinols formed from phenols by heating with benzotrichlorid. [< BENZOIN.]

ben'zene, 1 ben'zīn; 2 bĕn'zēn, n. 1. A colorless, volatile, inflammable liquid compound (C_6H_6) obtained chiefly from coal-tar by fractional distillation: preferred word for benzol. It is produced synthetically when acetylene is heated to a high temperature; and is also formed when benzoic acid is heated with lime. It burns with a luminous flame, has an ethereal odor, and is useful as a solvent, dissolving fats, resins, iodin, phosphorus, etc. It is employed as an illuminant in gas-manufacture; and is important as the starting-point in the formation of the compounds of the benzene series. 2. Benzin. [< BENZOIN.]— benzene ring or nucleus, the graphic formula of benzene. The hexagon formula (see diagram) shows that the six hydrogen atoms have equal value. Hence there can be but one mono-substitution product for a single element or radical. A di-substitution product may have three modifications according to the relative position of the substituting atoms or radicals, such positions being indicated by the prefixes ortho-, meta-, and para-, which correspond to the positions (1, 2), (1, 3) and (1, 4) when the number notation (see diagram) is used. Thus meta- or m-dioxybenzene would be written [1, 3] -dioxybenzene. When the substituted atoms or radicals are similar, the tri-substitution products are called: (1) adjacent, ricinal (r), or consecutive when the atoms or radicals are adjacent (occupying the positions 1, 2, 3); (2) unsymmetrical, asymmetrical (a or as), or irregular when two atoms or radicals are adjacent (occupying the positions 1, 2, 4); (3) symmetrical (s) when all the atoms or radicals are separated (occupying the positions 1, 3, 5).— b. series, a series of hydrocarbons that contain the benzene ring.— b. sulfonic acid, a compound ($C_6H_5SO_2OH$) obtained by boiling benzene with sulfuric acid.— ben'ze-noid, a. Resembling benzene; belonging to the benzene series.



Benzene Ring.

ben'zi-din, 1 ben'zi-din, -din or -dīn; 2 bĕn'zi-dĭn, -dĭn ben'zi-dine, or -dīn, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{12}H_{12}N_2$) derived from azobenzene by reduction: used in the preparation of dyes. [< BENZOIN.]

Ben'zie, 1 ben'zi; 2 bĕn'zĭ, n. A county in Michigan; 304 sq. m.; county-seat, Frankfort.

ben'zil, 1 ben'zil; 2 bĕn'zĭl, n. Chem. A yellowish compound ($C_{14}H_{10}O_2$) formed variously, as by oxidizing benzoin with nitric acid. [< BENZOIN.] ben'zile‡.— ben'zil-ate, n. Chem. A salt of benzilic acid.— ben-zil'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from benzil.— benzilic acid, a white compound ($C_{14}H_{12}O_3$) formed variously, as by warming benzil with alcoholic potash.

ben'zi-mid, 1 ben'zi-mid, -mid or -məid; 2 bĕn'zĭ-mĭd, ben'zi-mide, -mid or -mid, n. Chem. A white compound ($C_{21}H_{18}N_2O_2$) contained in oil of bitter almonds, and formed synthetically by treating benzoic aldehyde with hydrocyanic acid. [< BENZIN + AMID.]

ben'zin, 1 ben'zin, -zin or -zīn; 2 bĕn'zin, -zin or -zīn, n. ben'zine, 1. A colorless inflammable and volatile liquid obtained from petroleum by fractional distillation and consisting of various hydrocarbons. It is used as a solvent for fats, etc., to cleanse clothing, etc. petro'le-um-spir"it‡. 2. Benzene: an improper form. [< BENZOIN.]— ben'zin-pa"per, n. Paper the surface of which has been subjected to the action of benzin.

ben'zo-at"ed, 1 ben'zo-ēt"ed; 2 bĕn'zo-āt"ĕd, pa. Impregnated with benzoin or a benzoate; benzoinated.

ben"zo-gly-ox'a-lin, 1 ben'zo-glai-eks'ə-lin, -lin or ben"zo-gly-ox'a-line, -lin; 2 bĕn'zo-glȳ-ŏks'a-lĭn, -lĭn or -lĭn, n. Chem. One of a series of compounds that contain the glyoxalin ring united with the benzene ring, the simplest member of which has the formula $C_7H_6N_2$. [< BENZO- + GLYOXALIN.]

Ben"zo'heth, 1 ben'zō'heth; 2 bĕn'zō'hĕth, n. Bib. 1 Chron. iv, 20.

ben-zo'ic, 1 ben-zō'ik; 2 bĕn-zō'ĭc, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from benzoin, also benzoic acid.— benzoic acid, an aromatic compound ($C_7H_6O_2$) contained in resins, as benzoin, and in cranberries, putrid urine, coal-tar oil, etc., and obtained also by synthesis.— b. alcohol, an oily liquid (C_7H_8O) contained in balsams, as tolu and Peru.— b. aldehyde, a thin oily liquid (C_7H_6O). bitter almond oil‡.— b. ether, an oily liquid ($C_9H_{10}O_2$) obtained by distilling an alcoholic solution of benzoic acid with hydrochloric acid.

ben'zo-in, 1 ben'zo-in or -zəin; 2 bĕn'zo-ĭn or -zŏĭn, n. 1. A gum resin. See GUM. 2. The spicebush (Benzoin benzoin). 3. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{14}H_{12}O_2$) obtained variously, as from benzoic aldehyde by the action of an alcoholic solution of potassium cyanid. 4. Bot. (1) [B-] A small genus of North-American and Asiatic shrubs or trees of the laurel family (Lauraceæ), the two American species being aromatic deciduous shrubs, with alternate, entire, feather-veined leaves and dicœcious or polygamous honey-yellow flowers in lateral nearly sessile umbellate clusters appearing before the leaves. B. benzoin and B. mellissæfolium are the common and the hairy spicebush respectively. (2) Any plant of this genus. [< F. benjoin, < Pg. beijoin, < Ar. lubân jâwî, incense of Java.]— flowers of benzoin, same as BENZOIC ACID.

ben'zo-in-ate, 1 ben'zo-in-ēt; 2 bĕn'zo-ĭn-āt, tt. [-AT"ED; -AT'ING.] To impregnate or mix with benzoin or benzoic acid.

ben"zo-in'du-lines, 1 ben'zo-in'diu-linz or -linz; 2 bĕn'zo-ĭn'dū-lĭns or -lĭnz, n. pl. See INDULIN.

ben'zol, 1 ben'zōl or -zol; 2 bĕn'zōl or -zŏl, n. 1. Same as BENZENE. 2. A coal-tar product obtained by mixing hydrocarbons of the benzene series: used as a cleanser and solvent, in color-manufacture, etc. The most important commercial benzols are the ninety per cent. benzol (containing approximately 70 per cent. benzene, 24 to 27 per cent. toluene, and small percentages of xylene, carbon disulfid, etc.), and the fifty per cent. benzol (containing larger percentages of toluene and xylene than the former). [< BENZOIC + L. oleum, oil.] ben'zole‡.— ben'zo-lat"ed, a. Pharm. Combined or treated with benzol.

ben'zo-lin, 1 ben'zo-lin, -lin or -lin; 2 bĕn'zo-lĭn, -lĭn or ben'zo-line, -lin, n. 1. A mixture containing hexane, heptane, octane, and other paraffins; petroleum spirit or ligroin. 2. Commercial benzene. 3. [Rare.] Amarin: formerly so called.

ben'zo-lize, 1 ben'zo-laiz; 2 bĕn'zo-lĭz, rt. [-LIZED; -LIZ'ING.] To mix with, or cause to unite with, benzene or one of its derivatives. ben'zo-lise‡.

ben"zo-naph'thol, 1 ben'zo-naf'thōl or -thel; 2 bĕn'zo-năf'thŏl or -thōl, n. Chem. A whitish crystalline powder ($C_6H_5.COOC_{10}H_7$), used mainly as an intestinal antiseptic; betanaphthol benzoate. [< BENZO- + NAPHTHOL.]

ben"zo-ni'trol, 1 ben'zo-nai'trōl or -trel; 2 bĕn'zo-nī'trōl or -trŏl, n. Dyeing. Diazotized paranitranilin, used in developing direct cotton dyes. [< BENZO- + NITROL.]

ben"zo-phe'none, 1 ben'zo-fī'nōn; 2 bĕn'zo-fē'nōn, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_6H_5COC_6H_5$), a ketone obtained variously, as from calcium benzoate by dry distillation. [< BENZO- + PHENOL.]

ben"zo-pur'pu-rin, 1 ben'zo-pūr'piu-rin; 2 bĕn'zo-pûr'pū-rin, n. Dyeing. A brown or red powder derived from benzidin and used in dyeing cotton. [< BENZO- + PURPURIN.] ben"zo-pur-pu'rine†.

ben'zo-sol, 1 ben'zo-sōl or -sel; 2 bĕn'zo-sōl or -sŏl, n. Chem. A colorless, odorless crystalline powder ($C_6H_5.COOC_6H_4.OCH_3$), used as an intestinal antiseptic and in tuberculosis; guaiacol benzoate. [< BENZO- + -S- + -OL.] ben"zo-yl-gual'a-colt.

ben"zo-thi'a-zole, 1 ben'zo-thai'ə-zōl; 2 bĕn'zo-thī'a-zōl, n. Org. Chem. One of a series of weak bases having the benzene ring united to the thiazole ring, the simplest member being the compound C_7H_5NS; methenyl amidothiophenol. [< BENZO- + THIAZOLE.]

ben"zo-thi'o-phene, 1 ben'zo-thai'o-fin; 2 bĕn'zo-thī'o-fēn, n. Same as THIONAPHTHENE. [< BENZO- + THIOPHENE.]

ben"zo-tri-chlo'rid, 1 ben'zo-trai-klō'rıd; 2 ben'zo-trī-clō'rid, n. Chem. A colorless, transparent, highly refractive liquid ($C_7H_5Cl_3$), with penetrating odor, obtained by boiling toluene with chlorin, and used in anilin dyes. [< BENZOIN + TRICHLORID.]

Bibl., abbr. Biblical; bibliographical; bibliotheca.

Bi'ble, 1 bai'bl; 2 bi'bl, n. 1. The Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as received by the Christian Church as a divine revelation: in certain churches embracing also parts of the Apocrypha; in early and still in dialect use, the Old Testament, as distinguished from the New; as, the Bible and the Testament; also the Old Testament Scriptures in the form accepted by the Jews.

The date of the Bible as a whole can only be approximately given, but some of the oldest poems in the Old Testament may be safely assigned to the period of the Judges, about 1200 B. C., while certain of the Psalms, with the Book of Daniel, are probably later than 200 B. C.; the New Testament writings date from about A. D. 50 to A. D. 150, the whole collection of books including the later apocryphal Jewish literature, thus covering a period of about thirteen centuries. The Old Testament was written in Hebrew, with a few portions in Aramaic, and the New Testament in Hellenistic Greek. For centuries the Latin translation made by Jerome and known as the Vulgate was the only European Bible; versions in various languages began to appear from the 13th century on. Caedmon's Paraphrase, which consisted of parts of the Scriptural narrative put into verse, was the first Anglo-Saxon rendering of the Scriptures and dates from the 7th century. Bede translated the Gospel of St. John in 735. King Alfred left an unfinished rendering of the Psalms in Anglo-Saxon, but no translation of the entire Bible was made until that of John Wyclif, with the assistance of Nicholas of Hereford and John Purvey, in 1382. Purvey revised this in 1388. A translation of the New Testament by William Tyndale was published at Worms, 1525-1526. The Pentateuch and the historical books from Joshua to 2 Chronicles followed in 1530. The first complete Bible printed in English was that of Miles Coverdale, issued in 1535; this was based on Tyndale's work and Luther's German translation. The more important English editions published subsequent to this are: Matthew's Bible (1537); Taverner's Bible (1539), the first complete Bible actually printed in England; it was a revision of Matthew's Bible made by Richard Taverner; the Great Bible (1539), the authorized version until 1568, whose Psalter is still in use in the Church of England; the Geneva Bible (1560), the Bishops' Bible (1568), the joint labor of eight English Bishops; and King James's Bible (1611). See below and compare CODEX. For various other versions see under VERSION. See also APOCRYPHA; CANONICAL; TESTAMENT.

But if we ask ourselves what the word [Bible] means, and know that it means simply 'the Book,' so that there was a time when 'bible' in English would be applied to any book (in Chaucer it is so), then how much matter of thought and reflection is here, and in this our present restriction of the word to one book, to the exclusion of all others.

[< AS. bindan.]

Syn.: compel, engage, fasten, fetter, oblige, restrain, restrict, secure, shackle, tie. Binding is primarily by something flexible, as a cord or bandage drawn closely around an object or group of objects, as when we bind up a wounded limb. We bind a sheaf of wheat with a cord; we tie the cord in a knot; we fasten by any means that will make things hold together, as a board by nails, or a door by a lock. The verbs tie and fasten are scarcely used in the figurative sense, tho, using the noun, we speak of the ties of affection. Bind has an extensive figurative use. One is bound by conscience or honor; he is obliged by some imperious necessity; engaged by his own promise; compelled by physical force or its moral equivalent. See ATTACH.— Ant.: free, loose, set free, unbind, unfasten, unloose, untie. Prep.: Bind to a pillar; unto an altar; to a service; bind one with chains or in chains; one is bound by a contract; a splint is bound upon a limb; the arms may be bound to the sides or behind the back; bind a wreath about, around, or round the head; twigs are bound in or into fagots; for military purposes, they are bound at both ends and in the middle: one is bound under a penalty to fulfil a contract.

2. Having two eyes. [< BIN- + L. oculus, eye.] bin-oc'u-late†.— binocular glass, any magnifying-glass having two eyepieces. See MICROSCOPE.— bin-oc"u-lar'ı-ty, n.— bin-oc'u-lar-ly, adv.

bin-oc'u-lar, n. A telescope, microscope, opera-glass, or field-glass adapted to vision with both eyes at once.

STANLEY In Darkest Africa vol. ii, p. 325. [S. 1890.]

bin-oc'u-lus, 1 bin-ok'yu-lus; 2 bin-ŏc'yu-lus, n. A bandage applied to the head in the form of the figure 8, covering both eyes. [< BIN- + L. oculus, eye.]

bi-no'dal, a. 1. Bot. Having two nodes as a stem. 2. Geom. (1) Having or relating to two nodes. (2) Having a binode.— bi'node, n. Geom. A point of a surface at which there are two tangent planes.— bi-no'dose, a. Having two knot-like swellings, as antennæ. bi-no'dous†.

bi-no'men-cla"ture, n. Binomial nomenclature.

bi-no'mi-al, 1 bai-nō'mı-əl; 2 bī-nō'mi-al, a. 1. Alg. Of, pertaining to, or constituting an expression of two terms. 2. Biol. Of, having, or employing two terms or names, the generic and specific, as in a scientific name, e. g., Felis domestica (the common cat), Quercus alba (the white oak). 3. Consisting of two names. [< LL. binomius, < L. bi- (see BI-) + nomen (nomin-), name.]

— binomial coefficients, the coefficients of the terms in the formula of the binomial theorem.— b. nomenclature (Biol.), the system of naming animals and plants binomially: originated by Linnæus (Carl Linné), and hence also known as the Linnean system.— b. proposition (Logic), a second adjacent proposition.— b. theorem, the theorem stating the general form of any power of a binomial.— bi-no'mi-al-ly, adv.

bi-no'mi-al, n. 1. Alg. An expression consisting of two terms. 2. Biol. A name consisting of two words, one indicating the genus, the other the species.— bi-no'mi-al-ism, n. The system or method of employing binomial nomenclature. bi-no"mi-al'ı-ty†.— bi-no'mi-al-ist, n.

bi-nom'ı-nal, 1 bai-nom'ı-nal; 2 bī-nŏm'ı-nal, a. Of or characterized by two names. See BINOMIAL, a., 2. [< L. binominis, < bi- (see BI-) + nomen (nomin-), name.]

bi-nom'ı-nat"ed, 1 bai-nem'ı-nēt"ed; 2 bī-nŏm'ı-nāt"ĕd, a. Having two names. bi-nom'ı-nous†.

Bi-non'do, 1 bi-nen'do; 2 bi-nŏn'do, n. A suburb of Manila.

bi-not'o-nous, 1 bai-net'o-nus; 2 bī-nŏt'o-nŭs, a. In two notes; as, the binotonous cry of a bird. [< BIN- + L. tonus; see TONE.] [bint; see BINARY.]

bi'nous, 1 bai'nus; 2 bī'nŭs, a. Same as BINATE. [< L.

bin-ox'a-late, 1 bin-eks'ə-lēt; 2 bin-ŏks'a-lāt, n. [Rare.] Chem. An oxalate in which a metal has displaced but one atom of hydrogen. [< BIN- + OXALATE.]

bin-ox'id, 1 bin-eks'ıd; 2 bin-ŏks'id, n. [Rare.] Chem. A dioxid. [< BIN- + OXID.] bin-ox'ide†; bin-ox'ı-da†; bin-ox'yde†.

Bin'tang, 1 bin'taŋ; 2 bin'tăng, n. A Dutch island near Singapore; 454 sq. m.; produces gambier, ginger, etc.

Binturong. 1/8

bi-nu'cle-ate, a. Having two nuclei, as a cell. bi-nu'cle-ar†.— bi-nu'cle-o-late, a. Having two nucleoli, as a nucleus.

Bin'ue, 1 bin'wı; 2 bin'wē, n. A river in West Africa; 850 m. to the Niger river.

bi'o-, 1 bai'o-; 2 bī'o-. Derived from Greek bios, life; a combining form.— bi" o - bib" li - o - graph'i - cal, a. Treating of the life and the writings of an author. — bi'o-blast, n. A bioplast.— bi"o-blas'tic, a.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

Bi"o-bi'o, 1 bi'o-bi'o; 2 bī'o-bī'o, n. 1. A river in Chile, flowing 300 m. to the Pacific ocean. 2. A province of Chile; 5,245 sq. m.; capital, Angeles.

bi"o-cel'late, 1 bai'o-sel'ēt; 2 bī'o-çĕl'āt, a. Having two eye-like marks.

bi"o-ce-no'sis, 1 bai'o-sı-nō'sıs; 2 bī'o-çe-nō'sis, n. Biol. The relations of organisms to other organisms with which they live. [life as a central fact.

bi"o-cil"ma-tol'o-gy, 1 bai'o-kil"ma-tol'o-jı; 2 bī'o-cil"ma-tŏl'o-ġy, n. The study of climate in its relations to life. [< Gr. bios, life, + CLIMATOLOGY.]

bi-oc'u-lar, a. Anthrop. Relating to the two eyes; as, the internal biocular breadth, the space between the inner corners of the eyes. [< BI- + L. ocellus, dim. of oculus, eye.]

bi'od, 1 bai'ŏd; 2 bī'ŏd, n. The od of animal life; the alleged force in animal magnetism. See BIOGEN, 2. [< BIO- + OD†.]

bi"o-dy-nam'ics, 1 bai'o-dai-nam'ıks; 2 bī'o-dȳ-năm'ics, n. The branch of biology that treats of the activities of living organisms. [< BIO- + DYNAMICS.] — bi"o-dy-nam'ic, bi"o-dy-nam'i-cal, a.

bi'o-gam'ı-a, 1 bai'o-gam'ı-ə; 2 bī'o-găm'i-a, n. The blending of two opposed vital properties with an indifferent third property. F. Med. Dict.

bi'o-gen, 1 bai'o-jen; 2 bī'o-ġĕn, n. 1. The hypothetical protoplasmic unit of which cells are built. 2. A hypothetical soul-stuff, the od of psychical life. [< BIO- + -GEN.] — bi"o-gen-a'tion, n. The state or condition resulting from biogen; vitalization.

bi"o-gen'e-sis, 1 bai'o-jen'ı-sis; 2 bī'o-ġĕn'e-sĭs, n. Biol. 1. The doctrine that life is generated from living beings only; also, such generation itself: opposed to abiogenesis.

The hypothesis that living matter always arises by the agency of pre-existing living matter . . . I shall call . . . the hypothesis of Biogenesis. HUXLEY Lay Sermons p. 350. [A. 1870.]

2. Biogeny. [< BIO- + GENESIS.] — bi"o-gen'e-sist, n. A believer in biogenesis. bi-og'e-nist†.

bi"o-ge-net'ic, 1 bai'o-ji-net'ik; 2 bī'o-ġe-nĕt'ic, a. Of or pertaining to biogenesis, biogeny, or biogen.

bi-og'e-ny, 1 bai-oj'ı-nı; 2 bī-ŏġ'e-ny, n. Biol. 1. The history of the evolution of organisms, embracing ontogeny and phylogeny; the evolution of living things.

Biogeny comprises embryology, morphology, and questions relating to the origin of species.
FISKE Cosmic Philosophy vol. i, p. 221. [o. & co. 1875.]

2. Biogenesis. [< BIO- + -GENY.] — bi-og'e-nous, a. Growing on living things: said of bacteria.

bi"o-ge-og'ra-phy, 1 bai'o-ji-eg'rə-fı; 2 bī'o-ġe-ŏġ'ra-fy, n. The science of the geographical distribution of living organisms, both animal and vegetable.— bi"o-ge"o-graph'i-cal, a.— -ly, adv.— bi"og-no'sis, n. Biol. Research into the origin and phenomena of life.

bi'o-graph, n. 1. A kinetograph: one of numerous trade names in common use. 2. [Rare.] A brief biography. [< BIO- + -GRAPH.]

bi-og"ra-phee', 1 bai-eg'rə-fī'; 2 bī-ŏġ'ra-fē', n. [Humorous.] The subject of a biography.

bi-og'ra-pher, } 1 bai-eg'rə-fər; 2 bī-ŏġ'ra-fer, n. A bi-og'ra-ferˢ, } writer of biography; one who writes an account of the life and doings of some particular person. bi-og'ra-phist†.

The authors of the four canonical Gospels were not biographers in the modern sense of the word.
LEW WALLACE Boyhood of Christ p. 35. [B. 1889.]

[< LL. biographus, < Gr. bios, life, + graphō, write.]

bi"o-graph'ic, } 1 bai'o-graf'ık, -ı-kəl; 2 bī'o-ġrăf'ic, bi"o-graf'ics, } -i-cal, a. Of, pertaining to, or con-bi"o-graph'i-cal, } sisting of biography.— bi"o-graph'i-bi"o-graf'i-calˢ, } cal-ly, adv.

SPENCER Study of Sociology ch. 2, p. 33. [A. 1877.]

bi-og'ra-phize, 1 bai-eg'rə-faiz; 2 bī-ŏġ'ra-fīz, vt. [-PHIZED; -PHIZ'ING.] [Rare.] To write a biography of; as, to biographize the leader of a great movement.

bi-og'ra-phy, 1 bai-eg'rə-fı; 2 bī-ŏġ'ra-fy, n. [-PHIES, bi-og'ra-fyˢ, } 1 -iz; 2 -iġ, pl.] 1. A written account of a person's life, actions, and character.

I don't desire my biography to be written till I am dead.
W. T. SHERMAN Memoirs vol. i, p. 269. [A. 1875.]

2. That form of history proper whose subject is the facts and events of individual experience. When the experience is that of the writer, it is autobiography.

Biography is by nature the most universally profitable, universally pleasant of all things.
CARLYLE Sartor Resartus bk. i, ch. 11, p. 65. [L. co.]

3. Biol. The life-history of an organism.

Syn.: autobiography, life, memoir, reminiscences, sketch. — Ant.: legend, myth, tradition.

bi"o-ki-net'ics, n. The branch of biology that treats of the changes of organisms during their development. [< BIO- + KINETICS.]

biol., abbr. Biological; biology.

bi"o-log'ic, } 1 bai'o-loj'ık, -ı-kəl; 2 bī'o-lŏġ'ic, -i-cal, bi"o-log'i-cal, } a. Of or pertaining to biology.

bi-ol'o-gize or -gise, 1 bai-el'o-jaiz; 2 bī-ŏl'o-ġīz, vt. & vi. [-GIZED; -GIZ'ING.] 1. To handle biologically; pursue the study of biology. 2†. To mesmerize.— bi-ol'o-giz"er, n.

bi-ol'o-gy, 1 bai-el'o-jı; 2 bī-ŏl'o-ġy, n. 1. The science of life and living organisms, treating of the phenomena (structure, growth, development, distribution, and functions) manifested by animals and plants, or of the causes of those phenomena; the study of living matter.

When it treats of the structure, etc., of all living beings alike, it is structural biology; when it treats of the kingdoms of nature separately, it is systematic biology. Structural biology embraces (1) morphology, which treats respectively of form and change of form in organs and organisms considered merely as definite arrangements of matter; (2) physiology, which regards organisms as living beings and studies their nutrition, growth, and reproduction; (3) distribution, both geographical and geological, the one treating of the variation of life with locality and its adaptation to different climatic conditions, the other of the analogous variation and adaptation throughout successive past ages (paleontology); and, finally, (4) etiology, which strives to assign causes for all these facts, and includes phylogeny, the genealogical study of races, of organisms, and ontogeny, the philosophy of the origin of individual existences. Systematic biology includes (1) zoology, (2) botany, and (3) in some systems of classification anthropology. As a branch of anthropological somatology (see SOMATOLOGY) human biology embraces the study (1) of the changes produced by nutrition, climate, etc., and (2) of the anatomical classification of races, including (a) comparative physiology and pathology, (b) comparative nosology, and (c) criminal anthropology. 2. Physiology. 3. The life-history of an animal, especially of an insect. 4†. Animal magnetism. 5†. The study of human life. [< BIO- + -LOGY.]

bi'o-mon"ad, 1 bai'o-men'ad; 2 bī'o-mŏn'ăd, n. A granule of protoplasm composed of biomones; a unit in the structure of a cell-wall. [< BIO- + MONAD.]

bi'o-mone, 1 bai'o-mōn; 2 bī'o-mōn, n. A microscopic portion of living matter (protoplasm), composed of biomolecules. [< BIO- + Gr. monos, single.]

bi'on†, 1 bai'en; 2 bī'ŏn, n. Biol. [BI-ON'TA, pl.] A physiological individual characterized by definiteness and independence of function: opposed to morphon. [< Gr. biōn, ppr. of bioō, live.] — bi'on-er"gy, n. Life-energy.

Bi'onˢ, 1 bai'en; 2 bī'ŏn, n. A Greek pastoral poet; flourished at Smyrna about 280 B. C.; Lament for Adonis.

Bi"on-del'o, 1 bi'en-del'o; 2 bī'ŏn-dĕl'o, n. In Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew, Lucentio's servant.

bi-on'ic, 1 bai-on'ık; 2 bī-ŏn'ic, a. Possessing the quality of repeating in successive generations the same morphological characteristics: said of organisms.

The relative value of the constituent species is expressed in terms of the abundance or rarity of the individuals of each faunule sample, viz.: bionic value.
H. S. WILLIAMS Am. Jour. Sci. vol. xiii, p. 432. [T. M. & T.]

[< Gr. bios, life.]

bi"o-nom'ics, 1 bai'o-nem'ıks; 2 bī'o-nŏm'ics, n. The branch of biology that treats of habits, breeding, and organic adaptation; it embraces those forces, apart from vital forces, affecting the development of living things and known as bionomic forces.— bi"o-nom'ic, -i-cal, a.— -i-cal-ly, adv.— bi-on'o-mist, n.

bi-on'o-my, 1 bai-en'o-mı; 2 bī-ŏn'o-my, n. 1. The science of the laws of living functions: formerly used as synonymous with physiology: now treated as the predictive stage of anthropology. 2. Same as BIONOMICS. [< BIO- + -NOMY.]

bi"on-tol'o-gy, 1 bai'en-tel'o-jı; 2 bī'ŏn-tŏl'o-ġy, n. The physiology of the species or genus.

Biontology embraces the transcendental or strictly philosophical in physiology.
J. A. MEIGS Methods of Studying Physiol. p. 6. [1859.]

bi-oph'a-gous, 1 bai-ef'ə-gus; 2 bī-ŏf'a-gŭs, a. 1. Consuming living organisms, as the insectivorous plants. 2. [Rare.] Parasitic.— bi-oph'a-gism, n.

bi'o-phore, 1 bai'o-fōr; 2 bī'o-fōr, n. Biol. One of the hypothetical ultimate constituents or primary units of germ-plasma or hereditary substance. Biophores are said by Weismann to be collected into larger groups classified as (1) determinants, which are beyond the present power of the microscope; (2) ids, which correspond to the visible granules of chromatin, and (3) idants, or chromosomes.

This differentiated part [nucleus] of the cell was originally a collection of reserve biophores. Nature Jan. 19, 1893, p. 265.

Weismann assumes that the biophor contains 1,000 molecules. A human red blood corpuscle measures about 7.7 μ; suppose it to be cubed it would contain as many as 3,652,264,000 biophors.
Report of Brit. Ass'n Adv. of Science '01, p. 814.

bi"o-pho'to-phone, n. An apparatus that combines the kinetograph and phonograph in simultaneous action, the one reproducing the motions of the original, the other, the sounds uttered, as in singing, speaking, etc.— bi"o-phys'ics, n. The physics of living things.

bi"o-phys"i-ol'o-gy, 1 bai'o-fiz'ı-el'o-jı; 2 bī'o-fȳs'i-ŏl'o-ġy, n. Physiological botany and zoology, treating of anatomy, organography, and morphology, and of the processes of growth, nutrition, and decay, as distinguished from biophysiography. [< BIO- + PHYSIOLOGY.] — bi"o-phys"i-o-log'i-cal, a.— bi"o-phys"i-ol'o-gist, n.

bi'o-plasm, 1 bai'o-plazm; 2 bī'o-plăsm, n. Formative living matter; true or germinal protoplasm; plasmogen: a term originated by Dr. Lionel S. Beale (1872), who defined it as "living, forming, growing, self-producing matter, as distinguished from matter in every other state or condition." [< BIO- + Gr. plasma.] — bi"o-plas'mic, a.

Thus does the Bioplasm contain the materials of Yesterday, the materials of To-day, and the materials of To-morrow.
LEWES Problems of Life first series, vol i, p. 110. [o. & co. 1874.]

bi'o-plast, 1 bai'o-plast; 2 bī'o-plăst, n. A cell or particle of bioplasm, as a white blood-corpuscle. [< BIO- + Gr. plassō, form.] — bi"o-plas'tic, a.

bi'op-sy, 1 bai'ep-sı; 2 bī'ŏp-sy, n. The examination of some portion of a living body, severed from the whole for scrutiny in aid of correct diagnosis. [< BIO- + Gr. opsis, sight.]

bi"o-psy'chic, 1 bai'o-sai'kik; 2 bī'o-sȳ'cic, a. Of or pertaining to psychic phenomena as regarded from the biological point of view. bi"o-psy'chi-cal†.— bi"o-psy-chol'o-gy, n. That branch of mental science which uses the methods, and is based upon the facts and principles, of biology.—

bi"o-psy"cho-log'i-cal, a.— bi"o-psy-chol'o-gist, n. A student of mind in its relations to the phenomena and laws of life; an advocate of the biopsychic method in psychology.

bi-or'di-nal, 1 bai-ôr'di-nal; 2 bī-ôr'di-nal. I. a. Of the second order. II. n. Math. A linear differential equation of the second order.

bi'or"gan, 1 bai'ôr"gan; 2 bī'ôr"gan, n. Biol. A physiological organ: opposed to idorgan. [< BIO- + ORGAN.]

Biorn of the Fiery Eyes, 1 byôrn; 2 byôrn. In Fouqué's Sintram and his Companions, a fierce Norse knight, father of Sintram, saved by his son's conquest over evil.

bi'o-scope, 1 bai'o-skōp; 2 bī'o-scōp, n. 1. A machine for projecting moving pictures on a screen; a kinetograph. 2. An instrument for showing two views of the same person in rapid succession. 3. [Rare, Eng.] A survey of life; also, any book that presents such a survey. [< Gr. bios, life, + -SCOPE.]

Bioscope.

F. film; Fr. film-reels; A. filter, through which images on special films are projected on to the screen; R, red transparency; G, green transparency; S, shutters. Arrows show direction in which reels and filter revolve.

bi-os'co-py, 1 bai-es'ko-pi; 2 bī-ŏs'co-py, n. Med. Examination to ascertain whether life exists or when it became extinct. [< BIO- + -SCOPY.]

bi'ose, 1 bai'ōs; 2 bī'ōs, n. Chem. A sugar which contains 12 carbon atoms corresponding with a dihydric alcohol, and which on hydrolysis is split up into two sugars. [< L. bis, twice.]

bi-o'sis, 1 bai-ō'sis; 2 bī-ō'sis, n. Life-energy; vitality. [< Gr. biōsis, < bios, life.]

bi'o-sphere, 1 bai'o-sfir; 2 bī'o-sfēr, n. The totality of living things on the earth's surface, as distinguished from the life in the atmosphere or in the lithosphere. [< BIO- + SPHERE.]

bi"o-stat'ics, n. The branch of biology that treats of the potentialities of organisms or of structure as related to function: opposed to biodynamics.— bi"o-stat'ic, -i-cal, a. Of or pertaining to biostatics.— bi"o-sta-tis'tics, n. Vital statistics.
